RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE SUPREME COURT

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN
Plaintiff-Appellee,

v.

JOSHUA LAMAR-JAMES STEWART No. 162497
Defendant-Appellant.

L.C. 16-005731-01-FC
COA No. 343755

PLAINTIFF-APPELLEE'S SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF

Oral Argument Requested**

KYM L. WORTHY
Prosecuting Attorney
County of Wayne

JON P. WOJTALA
Chief, Research, Training, and Appeals

TIMOTHY A. BAUGHMAN (P 24381)
Special Assistant Prosecuting Attorney
11TH Floor
Detroit, Michigan 48226
Phone: (313) 224-5792

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Table of Contents

Page

Index of Authorities . . . . . -iii-

Statement of the Questions . . . . . -1-

Statement of Facts . . . . . -1-

Argument . . . . . -2-

I. A trial court determination of the voluntariness of a statement should only be set aside if the reviewing court is left with a firm and definite conviction that a mistake was made. Judge Kenny found that any exaggeration of the evidence made to the defendant, and an example given of someone who had made a statement and received leniency, no promise of the same treatment being made to the defendant, did not render the statement involuntary. No mistake was made. . . . . -2-

A. The grounds raised in the motion to suppress were more narrow than now raised . . . . . -2-
B. The trial judge did not clearly err in his determination of voluntariness . . . . . -3-
C. The explanation of Miranda rights . . . . . -6-
D. Use of the "N-word" . . . . . -9-
E. The finding that the statement was voluntary should not leave the Court with a firm and definite conviction a mistake was made . . . . . -10-

II. The legislature through MCL 769.34(10) has provided that sentences within properly scored guidelines are not subject to appellate review other than as to whether the sentencing court took into account inaccurate or inappropriate factors; in other words, such a sentence is, under the statute, lawful. There is no basis on which the statute can be said to be unconstitutional on the ground that sentences must be reviewable for "proportionality," or perhaps some other standard. The sentence here was within properly scored guidelines without consideration of any improper factors, and is not otherwise subject to review . . . . . -18-

Introduction . . . . . -19-

Discussion . . . . . -22-

A. A brief history of sentence review . . . . . -22-
1. Sentencing in the federal system: Congressional creation of appellate review of sentences, and abolition of mandatory guidelines . . . . . -22-

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

2. Sentencing in Michigan: judicial creation of appellate review of sentences, legislative creation of judicial review of sentences, and abolition of mandatory guidelines . . . . . -28-

B. That MCL 769.34(10) provides that otherwise proper guidelines sentences imposed by trial courts are not subject to appellate review is entirely constitutional . . . . . -39-

1. The statute is not inconsistent with Lockridge, which carefully excluded guidelines sentences from its holding . . . . . -39-

2. There is no "due-process right to appellate review" at all, and certainly not one to raise all possible issues; further, this issue is not properly before the Court . . . . . -40-

a. The issue is not properly before the Court, not having been raised in the Court of Appeals or the application for leave, and presenting a new issue not a new argument . . . . . -40-

b. There is no due-process right to appellate review of all issues . . . . . -47-

3. That under MCL 769.34(10) a sentence within properly scored guidelines that was not based on any inappropriate factors is valid, these being the only matters thus subject to appellate inquiry, does not render the guidelines mandatory and therefore in violation of the Sixth Amendment . . . . . -52-

C. Conclusion: defendant's sentence must be affirmed under the statute . . . . . -54-

D. Defendant's sentence is lawful . . . . . -55-

Relief . . . . . -56-

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Index of Authorities

Case Page

FEDERAL CASES

Abney v. United States,
431 U.S. 651, 97 S. Ct. 2034, 52 L. Ed. 2d 651 (1977) 46

Allen v. USAA Casualty Insurance Co.,
790 F.3d 1274 (CA 11, 2015) 41

Alleyne v. United States,
570 U.S. 99, 133 S. Ct. 2151, 186 L. Ed. 2d 314 (2013) 35, 49

Apprendi v. New Jersey,
530 U.S. 466, 120 S. Ct. 2348, 147 L. Ed. 2d 435 (2000) 35

Bankers Life & Casualty Co. v. Crenshaw,
486 U.S. 71, 108 S. Ct. 1645, 100 L. Ed. 2d 62 (1988) 42

Colorado v. Connelly,
479 U.S. 157, 107 S. Ct. 515, 93 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1986) 17

Crawford v Washington,
541 U.S. 36, 124 S. Ct.1354, 158 L. Ed. 2d 177 (2004) 43

D.C. v. Georgetown & T. Railway Co.,
41 F.2d 424 (CA DC, 1930) 50

Dewey v. Des Moines,
173 U.S. 193, 19 S. Ct. 379, 43 L. Ed. 665 (1899) 42

Frazier v. Cupp,
394 U.S. 731, 89 S. Ct. 1420, 22 L. Ed. 2d 684 (1969) 16

Gall v. United States,
552 U.S. 38, 128 S. Ct. 586, 169 L. Ed. 2d 445 (2007) 26, 35

Garner v. Mitchell,
557 F.3d 257 (CA 6, 2009) 8

Greenlaw v. United States,
554 U.S. 237, 128 S. Ct. 2559, 171 L. Ed. 2d 399 (2008) 44

Halbert v. Michigan,
545 U.S. 605, 125 S. Ct. 2582, 162 L. Ed. 2d 552 (2005) 47

Kimbrough v. United States,
552 U.S. 85, 128 S. Ct. 558, 169 L. Ed. 2d 481 (2007) 26

Koon v. United States,
518 U.S. 81, 116 S. Ct. 2035, 135 L. Ed. 2d 392 (1996) 23

Martinez v. Court of Appeal,
528 U.S. 152, 120 S. Ct. 684, 145 L. Ed. 2d 597 (2000) 46

Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Ludwig,
426 U.S. 479, 96 S. Ct. 2158, 48 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1976) 41

McKane v. Durston,
153 U.S. 684, 14 S. Ct. 913, 38 L. Ed. 867 (1894) 46

Mistretta v. United States,
488 U.S. 361, 109 S. Ct. 647, 102 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1989) 23, 34

New York Trustee Co. v. Eisner,
256 U.S. 345, 41 S. Ct. 506, 65 L. Ed. 963 (1921) 22

Northern Securities. Co. v. United States,
193 U.S. 197, 24 S. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679 (1904) 39

Privett v. Sec'y, Department of Homeland Sec.,
865 F.3d 375 (CA 6, 2017) 51

Reetz v. Michigan,
188 U.S. 505, 23 S. Ct. 390, 47 L. Ed. 563 (1903) 47

Rice v. Cooper,
148 F.3d 747 (CA 7, 1998) 8

Rita v. United States,
551 U.S. 338, 127 S. Ct. 2456, 168 L. Ed. 2d 203 (2007) 27, 53

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Shipping Co. v. Baker,
554 U.S. 471, 128 S. Ct. 2605, 171 L. Ed. 2d 570 (2008) 46

Solem v. Helm,
463 U.S. 277, 103 S. Ct. 3001, 77 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1983) 22

Thomas v. Lamarque,
121 F. App'x 220 (CA 9, 2005) 8

United States v. Binford,
818 F.3d 261 (CA 6,. 2016) 16

United States v. Booker,
543 U.S. 220, 125 S. Ct. 738, 160 L. Ed. 2d 621 (2005) 25, 37, 38

United States v. Burke,
504 U.S. 229, 112 S. Ct. 1867, 119 L. Ed. 2d 34 (1992) 44

United States v. Dunn,
728 F.3d 1151 (CA 9, 2013) 26

United States v. Hurlich,
348 F.3d 1219 (CA 10, 2003) 25

United States v. Kontny,
238 F.3d 815 (CA 7, 2001) 16

United States v. Rangel,
319 F.3d 710 (CA 5, 2003) 24

United States v. Sineneng-Smith,
140 S. Ct. 1575, 206 L. Ed. 2d 866 (2020) 46

United States v. Tomko,
562 F.3d 558 (CA 3, 2009) 26

United States v. Williams,
517 F.3d 801 (CA 5, 2008) 27

United States v. Wiltberger,
18 U.S. 76, 5 L. Ed. 37, 5 Wheat. 76 (1820) 18

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Zheng v. Gonzales,
422 F.3d 98 (CA 3, 2005) 51

STATE CASES

In re Baby Boy Doe,
975 N.W.2d 486 (2022) 45

Cummins v. People,
42 Mich. 142 (1879), ... 28, 29, 30

Johnson v. VanderKooi,
—Mich.—, 2022 WL. 2903868 (No. 160958, July 22, 2022) 42

Michigan Gun Owners, Inc. v. Ann Arbor Public Sch,Michigan Gun Owners, Inc. v. Ann Arbor Public Sch.,
502 Mich. 695 (2018) 43, 44

Nebraska Public Serv. Commission v. Nebraska Public Power District, 590 N.W.2d 840 (Neb., 1999) 50

Paramount Pictures Corp v. Miskinis,
418 Mich. 708 (1984) 3

People v. Betts,
507 Mich. 527 (2021) 21

People v. Brownridge,
459 Mich. 456 (1999) 41

People v. Bullock,
440 Mich. 15 (1992) 22

People v. Cheatham,
453 Mich. 1 (1996) 7

People v. Cipriano,
431 Mich. 315 (1988) 3

People v. Coles,
417 Mich. 523 (1983) 18, 28, 29, 30,

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

31, 54

People v. Conte,
421 Mich. 704 (1984) 16

People v. Daoud,
462 Mich. 621 (2000) 7

People v. Dixon-Bey,
321 Mich. App. 490 (2017) 38

People v. Givans,
227 Mich. App. 113 (1997) 16

People v. Jemison,
505 Mich. 352 (2020) 42

People v. Kelly,
99 Mich. 82 (1894) 28

People v. Lockridge,
498 Mich. 358 (2015) 19, 20, 21, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 49, 53, 54

People v. Lydic,
335 Mich. App. 486 (2021) 53

People v. Malkowski,
385 Mich. 244 (1971) 28

People v. McGraw,
484 Mich. 120 (2009) 17, 43

People v. McKinley,
496 Mich. 410 (2014) 41

People v. Merriweather,
447 Mich. 799 (1994) 33, 34

People v. Milbourn,
435 Mich. 630 (1990) 19, 20,

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 36

People v. Mitchell, 454 Mich. 145 (1997) 34

People v. Ryan, 295 Mich. App. 388 (2012) 3

People v. Steanhouse, 500 Mich. 453 (2017) 20, 21, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39

People v. Stewart, 508 Mich. 941 (2021) 19, 48

People v. Stovall, —Mich.—, (No. 162425, 7-28-2022) 22

People v. Tanner, 387 Mich. 683 (1972) 29

People v. Temelkoski, 501 Mich. 960 (2018) 41

People v. Walker, 504 Mich. 267 (2019) 3, 42, 43

People v. Wilder, 505 Mich. 1052 (2020) 40

People v. Worthington, 503 Mich. 863 (2018) 44

Reed v. Commonwealth, 834 S.E.2d 505 (Va. App., 2019) 41

State v. Clarke, 134 P.3d 188 (2006) 49

State v. Delbosque, 456 P.3d 806 (Wash., 2020) 49

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

State v. Pacheco,
850 P.2d 1028 (N.M. Ct. App., 1993) 50

State v. Pham,
136 P.3d 919 (Kan., 2006) 8

FEDERAL STATUTES

8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2) 51

18 U.S.C.A. § 3553(b)(1) 24

18 U.S.C.A. § 3742(e)(3)(C) 25

28 U.S.C.A. § 991 et seq 24

STATE STATUTES

1963 Mich. Const., art 1, § 17 3

MCL 769.9 23

MCL 769.26 . . . . . 43, 45

MCL 769.34 . . . . . passim

Alaska Const. art. I, § 7 3

Mich. Const. 1963, Art. 1, § 20 47

Mich. Const. 1963, Art. 6, § 10 18

RCW 9.94A.585(1) 48

Wash. Const. art. I, § 22 48

OTHER AUTHORITY

2 Graham, Handbook of Fed. Evid. (9th ed.) 46

20 Fed. Prac. & Proc. Deskbook (2d ed.) 41

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Timothy A. Baughman, "Appellate Decision Making in Michigan: Preservation, Party Presentation, and the Duty to 'Say What the Law Is'," 97 U. Det. Mercy L. Rev. 223 (2020) 45

James J. Duane, "The Constitutionality of Irrebuttable Presumptions," 19 Regent U. L. Rev. 149, 160 (2007) 48

Robert J. Martineau, "Considering New Issues on Appeal: The General Rule and the Gorilla Rule," 40 Vand. L. Rev. 1023, 1060 (1987) 45

Andrey Spektor, Michael A. Zuckerman, "Ferrets and Truffles and Hounds, Oh My: Getting Beyond Waiver," 18 Green Bag 2d 77, 79 (2014) 42

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Statement of the Questions

I.

A trial court determination of the voluntariness of a statement should only be set aside if the reviewing court is left with a firm and definite conviction that a mistake was made. Judge Kenny found that any exaggeration of the evidence made to the defendant, and an example given of someone who had made a statement and received leniency, no promise of the same treatment being made to the defendant, did not render the statement involuntary. Was a mistake made?

Defendant answers: YES

The People answer: NO

II.

The legislature through MCL 769.34(10) has provided that sentences within properly scored guidelines are not subject to appellate review other than as to whether the sentencing court took into account inaccurate or inappropriate factors; in other words, such a sentence is, under the statute, lawful. Is there is any basis on which the statute can be said to be unconstitutional on the ground that sentences must be reviewable for "proportionality," or some perhaps some other standard, and, the sentence here being within properly scored guidelines without consideration of any improper factors, is it otherwise subject to review?

Defendant answers: YES

The People answer: NO

Statement of Facts

The People do not object to defendant's statement of facts, except for any argument, and with the addition of facts stated in the argument.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Argument

I.

A trial court determination of the voluntariness of a statement should only be set aside if the reviewing court is left with a firm and definite conviction that a mistake was made. Judge Kenny found that any exaggeration of the evidence made to the defendant, and an example given of someone who had made a statement and received leniency, no promise of the same treatment being made to the defendant, did not render the statement involuntary. No mistake was made.

A. The grounds raised in the motion to suppress were more narrow than now raised Defendant's motion to suppress his statement argued that 1) his Miranda waiver was invalid because the interrogating officers provided false information to him with respect to the evidence they had; 2) misled him with regard to the possible consequences of his actions if he gave an incriminating statement, and 3) the statement was involuntary, the motion citing factors to tbe considered in the inquiry but making little application of them. Nothing was said regarding alleged "minimiziation" of the rights, or the use of the "N-word" by Officer MacDonald—a man of color—when speaking to defendant, also a man of color, nor was any issue raised regarding the casual and culturally contextual use of the word by the officer by defendant in the Court of Appeals. An experienced and able judge, Judge Timothy Kenny, after viewing the videotape of the questioning,[1] held, citing authority, that 1) defendant was advised of his Miranda rights, 2) that the [1] MR. POLK: Judge, for the record there has not been anything placed on the record other than the fact that I filed my motion. The People filed their response, and there was a three-hour video.

Is that video a part of the Court's analysis?

THE COURT: It is. The video, which is attached and is part of the prosecutor's response, and I think an attachment.

332a.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

alleged misrepresentations to defendant regarding the evidence the police had and the consequences defendant faced did not render the statement involuntary.[2] The question is whether the Court should be left with a firm and definite conviction that the trial court erred in its conclusion.[3]

B. The trial judge did not clearly err in his determination of voluntariness

The trial judge said:

> The trial judge found, after viewing the video of the interrogation:
>
> The Court recognizes that for purposes of a Walker Hearing that the People bear the burden of showing by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant made a voluntary, knowing and intelligent waiver of his Fifth Amendment and Sixth Amendment rights to make a statement.
>
> In this particular case one of the claims made by the defense is that the defendant was not appropriately informed of his rights as required by the Supreme Court decision in Miranda versus Arizona. And certainly as set forward in People versus Wells at 238 Mich App 383, a 1999 case, the use of any involuntary statement that has been forced

---

[2] 327-332a.

[3] People v. Cipriano, 431 Mich. 315, 339 (1988); People v. Ryan, 295 Mich.App 388, 396 (2012). Defendant appears to argue—also for the first time—that the provision in Michigan's compulsory self-incrimination provision, 1963 Mich. Const., art 1, § 17, that "The right of all individuals, firms, corporations and voluntary associations to fair and just treatment in the course of legislative and executive investigations and hearings shall not be infringed" supplies some additional protection to the defendant. This provision appears designed to protect from some unspecified forms of abusive treatment by executive-branch agencies and legislative committees in conducting investigations, and was likely drawn from the Alaska constitution. See Alaska Const. art. I, § 7 ("The right of all persons to fair and just treatment in the course of legislative and executive investigations shall not be infringed."). It was proposed by Professor Harold Norris, see action journal, No. 10, Committee on Declaration of Rights, Suffrage, and Elections, And see the Convention Comment ("This recognizes the extent to which such investigations have tended to assume a quasi-judicial character"). 2 Official Record, Constitutional Convention 1961, p 3364. In any event, this Court has said that the clause "was not intended to modify the scope of the privilege against self-incrimination," Paramount Pictures Corp v. Miskinis, 418 Mich. 708, 730 (1984), and this Court should not consider the issue in any event as it is raised here for the first time. Cf. People v. Walker, 504 Mich. 267, 276 (2019) ("The prosecution argues for the first time in its supplemental brief to this Court that defendant waived any challenge to the instruction by approving of the instruction before it was given. The prosecution abandoned this theory").

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

by police offends the due process provisions of the 14th Amendment.

And the fact that this was an interrogation that lasted three hours, the three-hour time limit in and of itself is not determinative. The Court is required to examine all of the facts and circumstances in their totality to determine whether or not the length of the interrogation rendered the statement involuntary.

As a notation or bench mark, if you will, the Michigan Supreme Court in 1988 in People versus Cipriano found at 431 Michigan 315, if a defendant was interrogated on a number of different occasions over a 14-hour period, and that was found not to be an involuntary interview or interrogation session.

With regards to the notion of the defense claim that the defendant was not advised of his Miranda Rights, Michigan law is very clear that the defendant has to be apprized of his Constitutional Rights, and also the law is equally clear that the defendant does not have to be ritualistically advised of those rights as set forth in the Miranda decision.

The requirement as set forth by the Court indicating that any Court reviewing the Advice of Rights has to determine whether or not the words that were used by the officers in advising Mr. Stewart of his Constitutional Rights conveyed to him the information that is essential and required in the warnings to be given to the defendant. If the words used reasonably convey those rights as set forth in the Miranda Decision, then that is sufficient.

Not only does Michigan law stated that, but even in Florida versus Powell found at 559 United States, 50, 2010 United States Supreme Court decision it states the same thing.

An examination in this particular case indicates that the essence and the requirements of Miranda versus Arizona were conveyed to the defendant. The reasonable interpretation of the Advice of Rights made by the officers in this case does in fact establish that the defendant was advised of his Constitutional Rights, and the guarantees as set forth in Miranda versus Arizona were conveyed to the defendant.

There are two other claims that are made by the defense in terms of their claim that the confession should be suppressed. One is that the police lied to the defendant with regards to information that they had about the investigation that would incriminate the defendant, Mr. Stewart, and it is the defense contention that that is a justification and a basis for suppressing the statement.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

For quite some time United States Supreme Court and the Michigan Appellate Courts have stated that when a defendant is falsely advised of information about the crime, and as a result of that information the defendant confesses, that that in and of itself is not a basis for suppressing the statement. It is a factor to be considered by the Court in determining whether or not the defendant's statement is involuntary. But the fact that the police may say this to a defendant, hey, we found your fingerprints at the scene, even if that is not true, or we found your fingerprints on the murder weapon, and if that's not true, but the defendant ends up confessing, that is not by any means an automatic requirement that the defendant have his statement suppressed.

In Frazier versus Cupp found at 394 Michigan 731, a 1969 United States Supreme Court decision, the United States Supreme Court indicated that false statements given to the defendant by the police is not a basis for suppressing the statement in and of itself.

That is also echoed in People versus Hicks found at 185 Mich Appeals 1990 where the Court of Appeals stated and I quote: "The fact that the police misrepresented the fact to the defendant that his fingerprints were discovered on an article retrieved from the crime scene is insufficient to make this otherwise voluntary statement involuntary.

As the Court stated in Hicks, as well as the Supreme Court Decision in Frazier, it is one factor for the Court to consider in determining whether in the totality of the circumstances the statement is voluntarily made and whether or not the People have met their burden by a preponderance of the evidence.

The other claim made by the defense is that the defendant was allegedly promised leniency and a deal if he would in fact make a statement.

In People versus Givens found at the 227 Mich Appeals 113, a 1997 case, the Michigan Court of Appeals stated and I quote: "A promise of leniency is merely one factor to be considered in evaluation of the > voluntariness of a defendant's statement."

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

>
> In this particular case the defendant's statement was made after he was appropriately advised of the principles set forth in Miranda versus Arizona.
>
> The fact that there was a misrepresentations about the investigative facts, the statement that is alleged to be one of leniency, this Court finds that looking at the totality of the circumstances, the duration of the interview, the representations made by the officers, I'm not persuaded that it is an involuntary statement with regards to the Fifth Amendment protections extended to the defendant.[4]

Defendant now claims that the Miranda waiver was not effective because the warnings were "minimized" and because defendant did not understand them, and that the statement was involuntary because defendant was 18 and in an alternative school; an officer (himself a man of color) repeatedly used the "N-word" (raising this issue for the first time); and the officers misled defendant as to the evidence they had, and as to the possible consequences he faced.

C. The explanation of Miranda rights

It is not necessary that it be shown the defendant understood the consequences of his waiver, and nothing suggests that when defendant read out loud that "I have the right to remain silent" and "do not have to answer any questions"; that "any statement I make or anything I say will used against in the court of law"; that "I have the right to have an attorney, lawyer present during the time I answer my questions or make any statements"'; that "[i]f I cannot afford an attorney, lawyer one will be appointed for me without cost by the court prior to any questions"'; and that "I can decide at any time to exercise my rights and not answer any questions or make any statement"[5] that he did not from

[4] 326-332a.

[5] This rendering of defendant's reading of his rights out loud is taken from the transcript prepared as an aid to the appellate litigation; it is not itself evidence, as it was not prepared for nor admitted at trial.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

this reading understand that he did not have to answer questions if he did not want to. In People v. Cheatham[6] this Court noted that it had been established by the United States Supreme Court that "[a]bsent police conduct causally related to the confession, there is simply no basis for concluding that any state actor has deprived a criminal defendant of due process of law," which "eliminate[s] any subjective inquiry with regard to the voluntary prong of the waiver inquiry."[7] and also establishes that "the standard for determining whether a waiver is voluntary for Miranda purposes is the same standard for assessing whether a confession is voluntary under the Fourteenth Amendment due process inquiry."[8] With regard to whether the decision to speak after the warning of rights was "intelligent," it is not required that the suspect "understand the ramifications and consequences of choosing to waive or exercise the rights that the police have properly explained to him."[9] It need not be shown that the defendant had "a wise or shrewd basis for waiving Miranda rights for the waiver to be valid."[10] As federal cases have put it, if the police have no basis "to think that the suspect doesn't understand them, there is nothing that smacks of abusive behavior. It would seem to follow that the question is not whether if [the defendant] were more intelligent, informed, balanced, and so forth he would not have waived his Miranda rights, but whether the police believed

---

See Transcript of questioning, p. 5-6 (hereafter TQ).

[6] People v. Cheatham, 453 Mich. 1 (1996).

[7] Id., at 14-15) (emphasis supplied)..

[8] Id., at 17.

[9] Id., at 28.

[10] People v. Daoud, 462 Mich. 621, 642 (2000).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

he understood their explanation of those rights."[11] Defendant's reading of his rights, and his participation in answering questions, do not give rise to reason to believe that he did not understood what he had read out loud.[12] Nor does the fact that he was in an alternative school—and a senior—give rise, without more, for any such belief.

Defendant also says that the waiver was involuntary because the police "minimized" the warnings by saying "All right. Let's go through some paperwork real quick."[13] This preceded the detective taking defendant's personal information, as he then asked the spelling of defendant's name, whether he could read and write (he said he could), what grade he was in at school,[14] and where this was. It was after this that the detective then said "All right. So, this is a certificate of your constitutional rights. So all I want you to do is read one through five and then next to each one you's (sic) going to put your initials. And all your initials indicates means you understand what you're reading and then if you have any questions you just ask me."[15] Defendant then read the rights out loud, and the detective did nothing to diminish the rights read.[16] There is no basis to find the waiver

---

[11] Rice v. Cooper, 148 F.3d 747, 750–51 (CA 7, 1998). See also Garner v. Mitchell, 557 F.3d 257, 262–63 (CA 6, 2009).

[12] That defendant mispronounced "present" does not indicate he did not understand the gravaman of what he was reading. And it is not improper for the police to have the defendant read the rights out loud him or herself. See e.g. State v. Pham, 136 P.3d 919, 932 (Kan., 2006) ("Falletti testified he went over the Miranda rights with Pham by having him read out loud each of the five lines from the Miranda card"); United States v. Soto, 124 F. App'x 956, 964 (CA 6, 2005) ("While Soto contends that because he is illiterate he was unable to understand what he was signing, the record indicates that he read out loud the five rights on the interrogation form and that though he had trouble reading, he had reached the eleventh grade in school").

[13] 3a.

[14] Defendant said he was a senior, and was in a "kinda like a little alternative" school. 4a.

[15] 5a (emphasis added).

[16] And see Thomas v. Lamarque, 121 F. App'x 220, 222 (CA 9, 2005) ("First, although the detectives delayed and attempted to trivialize the Miranda warnings, their advisement reasonably unintelligent or involuntary, which turns on the use of coercive police conduct,[17] and there is nothing coercive here.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

D. Use of the "N-word"

Defendant claims for the first time that the casual use of the "N-word" by the officer—a man of color himself—denied defendant his right to "fair and just" treatment, and, perhaps, due process, saying that "[w]hether Officer MacDonald is white or Black makes no difference" and that "use of the word is an act of violence,"[18] suggesting the use of the word was some form of physical force against defendant. Both claims are remarkable—and should not be considered by the Court, being raised here for the first time. Persons of other races have on occasion been heard to complain that they should be able to use the word because persons of color often do among themselves.[19] But there is no question that cross-cultural use of the word is quite different, despite defendant's claim that it is not, than its use within the culture by members of that community.[20] conveyed Thomas's rights").

---

[17] See Cheatam and Daoud, supra.

[18] Defendant's Brief, p. 31.

[19] See Michael Harriot, "Why It's OK for Black People, but Not White People, to Use the N-Word, Explained (Again)," https://www.theroot.com/why-its-ok-for-black-people-but-not-white-people-to-u-1826255011

[20] See e.g. Keith Allan, "Contextual determinants on the meaning of the N word," 5 SPRINGER, July 20, 2016 (NIH.gov); https://springerplus.springeropen.com/articles/10.1186/s40064-016-2813-1#:~:text=%20Contextual%20determinants%20on%20the%20meaning%20of%20the,slur%20is%20an%20expression%20of%20disparagement...%20More%20.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

And to say that the word, no matter how used and by whom, is an act of violence, is simply to define words to suit one's purpose.[21] One may use words that provoke a violent response ("fighting words") or that reveal violent emotion by the speaker, but to do an act of violence is "the use of physical force so as to injure, abuse, damage, or destroy."[22] There was no act of violence here, and this Court should not consider defendant's claim regarding use of the word by the officer, the claim raised for the first time.

E. The finding that the statement was voluntary should not leave the Court with a firm and definite conviction a mistake was made

Nor was the trial court's finding that the statement given was not involuntary clearly erroneous. The trial court looked to the claims of "a misrepresentations about the investigative facts, the statement that is alleged to be one of leniency, ... [] the duration of the interview, the representations made by the officers," and, "looking at the totality of the circumstance," found the statement voluntary under a preponderance of the evidence standard. The record does not support a finding that the trial judge's decision was clearly erroneous.

Defendant initially denied knowing anything about the shooting.[23] Defendant said he just found "Prophet" shot-up in the vehicle in question, and drove him to the hospital. Officer MacDonald said "So, you the same height, the same complexion, the same age, the same hairstyle. The same clothes as this mother fucker's responsible for this shit on Savage and you— " and

---

[21] Reminding one of Alice in Lewis Carroll's Through the Looking Glass:

> "But 'glory' doesn't mean 'a nice knock-down argument'," Alice objected.
> "When I use a word," Humpty Dumpty said, in a rather scornful tone, "it means just what I choose it to mean – neither more nor less."

[22] Mirriam-Webster Dictionary.

[23] See e.g. "DETECTIVE LUCIE:· ·Who shot my man in the back? MR. STEWART: I don't have no clue. I don't even know who got shot." 53a defendant said "so they say."[24] Later, Detective Lucie said " Just tell us what happened. Get this shit off your chest, man. Because at the end of the day he's [Prophet] smarter than you. He made bad ·decisions. He got caught up. But he smarter than you. He going to run circles around your ass when it comes to the judicial system. He gone to have you looking stupid as fuck and you going to do 20 to life— "[25] Officer MacDonald entreated defendant to explain what had happened: "Josh, what happened?" Defendant: "Ya'll don't understand. Ya'll really don't. You don't." Officer MacDonald: "I know." Defendant: "No you don't understand." Officer MacDonald: "Did you pull the trigger on Savage?" Defendant: "No. I didn't do none of that. Ya'll don't understand. I didn't do none of that."[26]

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Defendant later said that the police wanted to "put me somewhere" (at the scene), and Officer MacDonald responded " I don't want you to do shit, Bro. I don't want you to do shit you ain't do. I ain't sitting here trying to force you to say shit."[27] When Officer MacDonald said "So, you want to sit here and put your fate in what you think mother fuckers can't prove? You going to lose" defendant responded "Dude, 20 years though," and Officer MacDonald said ""Man, I didn't say you was going to do 20 years" and defendant said "I didn't have a gun. I didn't shoot nothing."[28] Detective Lucie told defendant "Listen, you ain't got to ·tell on nobody. But you can tell us what you

[24] 67a.

[25] 84a.

[26] 85-86a.

[27] 88a.

[28] 90-91a.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

did."[29] Defendant said he "didn't do nothing."[30] Officer MacDonald told defendant "we sitting on this side of the table — we trying to find the fucking truth. Cause that's all I'm here for is the truth about what happened. That's it. I'm not sitting here trying to send you to prison for the rest of your life . . . . What led up to it and what happened afterwards. What's the evidence. That's all ·I'm here. I don't send anybody to prison, Bro. She don't send anybody to prison. All we do is find out the truth. Or we try to. That's all we do. I'm not the fucking judge. I'm not the fucking jury. I'm the guy that's supposed to find out what happened. And that's it. That's my job. And once I find out what happened I'm done."[31] MacDonald said to defendant "·I ain't putting that gun in your hand. I know Prophet had the pistol. A'ight? I know he shot and killed that boy. I know that. Fucking man the fuck up," and when defendant responded "That's all I'm saying. So, what you want me to say?" Officer MacDonald answered "I want you to fucking be honest. Cause that bullshit about you just walking through the hood and find this nshot, Bro — fuck that. I ain't believing that shit."[32]

Detective Lucie told defendant "What we're trying to get at is everything up until you having to drive dude to the hospital. Your version of what happened. Cause you don't want anybody else to determine your destiny."[33] When defendant said ""I didn't pull no trigger" Officer MacDonald responded ""Listen. Your life is in your hands. Are you gone [sic] take control of your own life and tell us what transpired or are you gone put your life into Prophet's hands and let him decide what [29] 92a.

---

[30] 93a.

[31] 94a,

[32] 96a.

[33] 98a.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

happened? Because like I told you, he shot three times. That means he got three bullets from the other dude's gun. He can't beat that. He's stuck. He's done. He has evidence in his body from somebody else gun that was protecting themselves from him. So, he can't dispute that. You ·understand what I'm saying?"[34] Detective Lucie later asked defendant "You not scared of the ·people over on Savage?" and defendant answered "Are you talking about as far as the incident? With them coming to me? Are you saying I'm scared in that way? As far as them killing me or something like that?" and Officer MacDonald said ""Is that what you worried about? Mother fuckers coming after you?" to which defendant responded "Yes, Man. This jack is real, Man. Real, Dog."[35]

Officer MacDonald said to defendant "you know I just got done doing a homicide trial, Man? This mother fucker shot two people with his sister in the car. With his sister in the car he killed two people. With his sister in the car. And she was scared to leave. You know what this mother fucker did? Point the gun at ·her and told her drive the fuck off because he didn't give a fuck about her. And when she got locked up I talked to her. She did the same shit you did. 'Man, I don't got nothing to say. I'm protect my brother.' Two ·weeks later you know what she did? 'Hey, MacDonald, Man, ·I want to talk to you.' Fuck that. I ain't let this ·mother fucker decide my fate. This mother fucker got found guilty of murder. You know what she got, Bro? ·Mother fucking two years. Because she decided her own mother fucking fate."[36] Officer MacDonald said to defendant "But the point is she took her own mother fucking fate in her own hands. She didn't let her fucking brother dictate her

[34] 100-101a,

[35] 105-106a.

[36] 108a. As will be seen, Officer MacDonald did not tell defendant he would get 2 years, and in his example, the sister said she was acting under duress.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

mother fucking life"; defendant said "I didn't take nobody vehicle. I didn't shoot nobody," and Detective Lucie responded "So tell us what you did do."[37] Defendant said he did not "want to be living no more" because " I just fucked my life up. Might just Dog. I just fucked my shit."[38]

When defendant said " You all want me to go to court and say," Officer MacDonald said ""I want you to go to court and say, 'this is what I did'" and Detective Lucie also said "What you did."[39] Defendant said "Ya'll want me to tell ya'll what I'm responsible for?" and Officer MacDonald told him "Yes, I want to know what Joshua Stewart did. That's what I want to know."[40] When defendant said "Ya'll talking bout two, three years" Officer MacDonald made clear that "I'm not saying you getting two years. I just gave you an example of what happened."[41] When MacDonald said again they were interested in "What was Joshua Stewart responsible for" defendant said ""Just driving," and when asked whether it was on Savage and Packard or on Meade, or both, defendant said it was on Savage. When asked "So was you on Meade? When Prophet got shot?" defendant answered "yeah."[42] Defendant later said "That was it. I was the driver. I didn't do nothing else."[43] Defendant

[37] 109-110a.

[38] 110a.

[39] 114a.

[40] 114a.

[41] 115a.

[42] 116-117a.

[43] 120a.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

first said "it wasn't no stickup."[44] He also said "We ride up the block. They shot at us. He [Prophet] shot back."[45]

Later defendant again said "I was driving the car. I was driving the car. That was it."[46] Defendant said that Prophet picked him up on Greeley; defendant then drove.[47] Shots were fired at them.[48] He did not see who was shooting.[49] Officer MacDonald told defendant "I know people jump out that car, announce the robbery, his brother came out the house, shootout happened. He got shot. Prophet got shot. Ya'll jump in the car. Or whoever jump back in the car and you shoot him to the hospital. So, like I said I think it took a lot of courage, Man — to get here and open up about it and start talking about it but I know leaving — I know you leaving things out."[50] Officer MacDonald said " Is it true that you was driving down Greeley and you stopped at Meade and people got out the car you was driving? Is that — is that a fair statement?" and defendant answered "yeah."[51] When Officer MacDonald asked "At some point did a dude come out the house and start shooting in your direction? Is that a fair statement?" defendant answered "Yeah, I guess. I mean — yeah. The windows — yeah."[52] Officer MacDonald asked "when Prophet got back in the car did you see him

---

[44] 122a.

[45] 126a.

[46] 134a; 136a.

[47] 136a.

[48] 137a.

[49] 139-140a.

[50] 142a.

[51] 146a.

[52] 146-147a.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM with a gun?" and defendant answered "He was bloody."[53] He later admitted there were three people in the car (including himself), but only he and Prophet when he took off and took Prophet to the hospital.[54] When asked if his phone would put him at Savage and Packard, and that he was "driving for that one too," with the same people in the car, defendant answered that it would.[55] When defendant talked about letting his mother down, he said " I just feel selfish. So selfish. I'm so selfish. I'm selfish and they tell me this though.. . . I ain't never did no time, feel me? Period. For my mama though. Cause ya'll talking about 20 or 2. Who wouldn't take 2. Do you feel me?" and Detective Lucie said "We're not the judge and we're not the jury. We don't — we don't hand down sentencing. All we do is investigate the crime."[56] Stewart later was asked "when he ·got back in the car he had the rifle? Is that a yes? I mean your head going up and down and shit" and defendant answered "Yeah, Man."[57]

Judge Kenny's ruling is well-supported by the case law. Trickery, to the extent there was any, is permissible.[58] And defendant was not promised leniency. An example of someone who took

[53] 147a.

[54] 150a.

[55] 152a.

[56] 162a.

[57] 168-169a.

[58] See e.g. United States v. Kontny, 238 F.3d 815, 817 (CA 7, 2001) ("Trickery, deceit, even impersonation do not render a confession inadmissible, certainly in noncustodial situations and usually in custodial ones as well, unless government agents make threats or promises," citing Frazier v. Cupp, 394 U.S. 731, 739, 89 S.Ct. 1420, 22 L.Ed.2d 684 (1969).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM responsibility and received a light sentence was told to defendant, but he was never promised the same result; indeed, that was disclaimed by the officer.[59] The police conduct here was not coercive.[60]

Also, the defendant's statement was not the only evidence he was driving the vehicle. Victim Kyle Upshaw identified him.[61] That defendant was driving the vehicle was thus otherwise established, and any error is harmless.[62]

---

[59] See e.g. United States v. Binford, 818 F.3d 261, 271 (CA 6,. 2016) ("speculation that cooperation will have a positive effect do not make subsequent statements involuntary"). And see People v. Conte, 421 Mich. 704 (1984) and People v. Givans, 227 Mich. App. 113, 120 (1997), cited by the trial judge ("a promise of leniency is merely one factor to be considered in the evaluation of the voluntariness of a defendant's statements").

[60] See United States v. Dominguez-Caicedo, 40 F.4th 938, 955 (CA 9, 2022) ("Introduction of a statement at trial that was given without 'coercive government misconduct' does not violate the Due Process Clause") citing Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 163, 107 S.Ct. 515, 93 L.Ed.2d 473 (1986).

[61] "When I was cleaning out my car, I noticed -- I heard tire marks or burned rubber, so I turned around and I seen two 16 fellas right here, not him but I seen two people running across the street with handguns, well, a handgun and an AK. Q, Did you see what car they came from? A. A blue Intrepid. Q. Did you see if there was anybody driving the car? A. Yes. Q. Did you see that person? A. Yes. Q. Who was that person? A. Right here. MR. HAYWOOD: For the record, he's identifying the defendant, Joshua Stewart." T 11-3, 33-34, Upshaw was shot at, and returned fire. His brother was wounded, and while at Receiving Hospital he saw defendant, who had taken Profit to the hospital. T, 11-3, 46.

[62] MCL 769.26: "No judgment or verdict shall be set aside or reversed or a new trial be granted by any court of this state in any criminal case, on the ground of misdirection of the jury, or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless in the opinion of the court, after an examination of the entire cause, it shall affirmatively appear that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." The People did not raise harmlessness in the Court of Appeals, which found no error, nor in the answer here, the Court of Appeals having found no error. But though this Court has said otherwise—see People v. McGraw, 484 Mich. 120, 131, n 36 (2009)—the argument is not subject to forfeiture, the Court having an affirmative duty not to set aside a verdict unless it affirmatively appears that a miscarriage of justice occurred.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

II.

The legislature through MCL 769.34(10) has provided that sentences within properly scored guidelines are not subject to appellate review other than as to whether the sentencing court took into account inaccurate or inappropriate factors; in other words, such a sentence is, under the statute, lawful. There is no basis on which the statute can be said to be unconstitutional on the ground that sentences must be reviewable for "proportionality," or perhaps some other standard. The sentence here was within properly scored guidelines without consideration of any improper factors, and is not otherwise subject to review.

[T]he power of punishment is vested in the legislative, not in the judicial department. It is the legislature, not the Court, which is to define a crime, and ordain its punishment.[63]

The jurisdiction of the court of appeals shall be provided by law.[64]

We do not agree that the constitutionally guaranteed right of appeal mandates review of the trial court's exercise of discretion in sentencing in order to comport with due process of law. The expansion of the scope of appellate review of sentencing is a matter of public policy within this Court's power to adopt; it is not constitutionally required.[65]

[63] United States v. Wiltberger, 18 U.S. 76, 95, 5 L. Ed. 37, 5 Wheat. 76 (1820).

[64] Mich. Const. 1963, Art. 6, § 10.

[65] People v. Coles, 417 Mich. 523, 542 (1983).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

> In our judgment, it is appropriate—if not unavoidable—to conclude that, with regard to the judicial selection of an individual sentence within the statutory minimum and maximum for a given offense, the Legislature similarly intended more serious commissions of a given crime by persons with a history of criminal behavior to receive harsher sentences than relatively less serious breaches of the same penal statute by first-time offenders. We believe that the Legislature's purpose is best served by requiring judicial sentencing discretion to be exercised according to the same principle of proportionality that has guided the Legislature in its allocation of punishment over the entire spectrum of criminal behavior.[66]
>
> If a minimum sentence is within the appropriate guidelines sentence range, the court of appeals shall affirm that sentence and shall not remand for resentencing absent an error in scoring the sentencing guidelines or inaccurate information relied upon in determining the defendant's sentence.[67]

Introduction

This Court in its order directing supplemental briefing and oral argument on the application specified that to be addressed is "whether the requirement in MCL 769.34(10) that the Court of Appeals affirm any sentence within the guidelines range, absent a scoring error or reliance on inaccurate information, is consistent with (1) the Sixth Amendment, (2) the due-process right to appellate review, and (3) People v Lockridge, 498 Mich 358 (2015)," and, if not, "(4) whether the appellant's sentence is reasonable and proportionate."[68] The People answer that the Court in Lockridge severed from the legislative sentencing scheme two statutory provisions, neither of which was MCL 769.34(10)[69]; further, the Court's remedy for the Sixth Amendment violation it found in

---

[66] People v. Milbourn, 435 Mich. 630, 635–636 (1990).

[67] MCL § 769.34(10).

[68] People v. Stewart, 508 Mich. 941 (2021) (numbering added).

[69] "[W]e sever MCL 769.34(2) to the extent that it makes the sentencing guidelines range as scored on the basis of facts beyond those admitted by the defendant or found by the jury beyond a reasonable doubt mandatory. We also strike down the requirement in MCL 769.34(3) that a sentencing court that departs from the applicable guidelines range must articulate a substantial and compelling reason for that departure." People v. Lockridge, 498 Mich. 358, 364–365 (2015).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM the legislative scheme carefully excluded sentences within the guidelines. These sentence are lawful under MCL 769.34(10) and not subject to appellate review, other than as to the scoring of the guidelines, consideration of inaccurate information, and constitutional claims regarding the consideration of inappropriate factors—there is simply nothing else to review that would render the sentence unlawful under the statutory scheme. The Lockridge requirement that out-of-guidelines sentences be subject on appeal to "reasonableness review for an abuse of discretion informed by the 'principle of proportionality'"[70] did not and does not touch guidelines sentences. This makes sense; the proportionality review of Milbourn[71] which the Court in Lockridge reinstated for out-of-guidelines sentences, having struck the legislative review scheme, was itself not something compelled by the constitution, but determined by this Court in that decision to be review implicity commanded by the legislative penal and sentencing scheme, a review standard which the legislature is free to change, end, or limit, and it is limited by MCL 76934(10).

Further, the Court's order appears to assume that there is a "due-process right to appellate review," at least of all issues a defendant wishes to raise, disabling a legislature from removing issues from appellate consideration; the People submit there is no such right.[72] Nothing in the [70] People v. Steanhouse, 500 Mich. 453, 476 (2017). Both in its Remedy section, and its introductory section summarizing its holdings, the Court in Lockridge excluded guidelines sentences from review for reasonableness: "we hold that a guidelines minimum sentence range calculated in violation of Apprendi and Alleyne is advisory only and that sentences that depart from that threshold are to be reviewed by appellate courts for reasonableness," People v. Lockridge, 498 Mich. at 365 (emphasis supplied); "A sentence that departs from the applicable guidelines range will be reviewed by an appellate court for reasonableness. Booker, 543 U.S. at 261, 125 S.Ct. 738. Resentencing will be required when a sentence is determined to be unreasonable." People v. Lockridge, 498 Mich. at 392 (emphasis supplied).

---

[71] People v. Milbourn, 435 Mich. 630 (1990).

[72] Moreover, defendant did not raise this issue in the Court of Appeals or in the application for leave to appeal to this Court. See infra.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

constitution compels any alteration of the legislative command that within-guidelines sentences are not subject to review so long as certain predicates are met—that there is no consideration of inappropriate material or inaccurate information, nor scoring errors affecting the range. Appellate review is thus available, but these are the only factors that affect the lawfulness of the sentence; there are simply no other issues to be reviewed by an appellate court. And unless the Constitution compels the setting aside of the legislative judgment, it stands. Indeed, this Court said in Lockridge that its goal in fashioning a remedy was to "preserve as much as possible the legislative intent in enacting the guidelines."[73] As Chief Justice, then Justice, Markman said in dissent in Lockridge, "[s]triking down statutes that reflect such a considered judgment of the people and their representatives is something to be done only when the incompatibility of a state law with the federal or state Constitution is manifest and our duty to preserve and maintain these charters of government is therefore directly and necessarily implicated."[74] There is no basis on which to void the legislative judgment here. Sentences within the guidelines, assuming the guidelines were correctly scored and the court did not consider anything inappropriate in setting sentence, are lawful under the legislative scheme, and thus not subject to further review. If the legislature wishes to change MCL 769.34(10) in light of Lockridge, then in the words of Justice Larsen, "the ball is in the Legislature's court,"[75] and not that of this Court. Defendant's assertion that "certain unique features of Michigan's sentencing guideline scheme provide no reassurance that the guideline ranges provide a [73] People v. Lockridge, 498 Mich. at 365 (emphasis supplied)..

[74] Id., at 429–430 (Markman, J., dissenting). See also People v. Betts, 507 Mich. 527, 576 (2021) (Viviano, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (the Court must consider "the presumption that statutes are constitutional, that the Legislature intended its enactment to be constitutional, and that legislation should not be declared unconstitutional 'except for clear and satisfactory reasons'").

[75] People v. Steanhouse, 500 Mich. at 484 (Larsen, J., concurring).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

proportionate sentencing option"[76] implicitly postulates that, to be constitutional, a sentence must be "proportionate," and must be so within the eyes of a reviewing court, the legislature being prohibited from precluding such review in certain circumstances—and rendering the federal cruel and unusual punishment constitutional prohibition and Michigan's cruel or unusual constitutional prohibition nugatory, these prohibiting "grossly disproportionate" sentences.[77] But this is not so.

Discussion

A. A brief history of sentence review

1. Sentencing in the federal system: Congressional creation of appellate review of sentences, and abolition of mandatory guidelines

Defendant's thesis is built upon the foundation that sentences must not only not be "grossly proportionate" (perhaps) in order to be constitutional, but "proportionate," and, to be constitutional, reviewable by an appellate court as to whether they are.[78] But there is no constitutional requirement that the legislature provide such a statutory scheme. History, as is often the case, helps make the point.[79]

---

[76] Defendant's Brief, p. 24.

[77] Solem v. Helm, 463 U.S. 277, 288, 103 S. Ct. 3001, 3008, 77 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1983); People v. Bullock, 440 Mich. 15, 37 (1992). If sentences must be reviewable for proportionality—and thus set aside if not "proportionate" in the view of the reviewing court—there is no point to constitutionally required review for gross disproportionality.

[78] One would not think it possible for a sentence below the mid-point of the guidelines range to constitute cruel or unusual punishment under the Michigan Constitution, and defendant has not so claimed; even this Court's holding that a discretionary and paroleable sentence of life for a double murderer constitutes cruel or unusual punishment would not reach this case. See People v. Stovall, —Mich.— (No. 162425, 7-28-2022).

[79] See New York Tr. Co. v. Eisner, 256 U.S. 345, 349, 41 S. Ct. 506, 507, 65 L. Ed. 963 (1921) ("a page of history is worth a volume of logic") (Holmes, J., for a unanimous Court).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

By way of context and comparison with Michigan sentencing, historically, so long as within the statutorily established sentence limitations an imposed sentence was unreviewable in the federal system, save for consideration of inaccurate information or inappropriate factors.[80] Initially, a specific sentence was required by statute, but later federal statutes came to provide for "indeterminate" sentences,[81] though that term means something different than it does in Michigan. Federally, an indeterminate sentence means that the statute includes a range instead of a specific sentence, within which the sentencing judge is to impose a specific term of years.[82] In Michigan, an indeterminate sentence means that the actual sentence set by the sentencing judge is itself indeterminate, with a minimum and a maximum, the maximum being the maximum set by law, and the minimum—the earliest parole eligibility date of the defendant, as actual service of up to and including the maximum sentence is authorized by the verdict—set by the sentencing judge, except for sentences carrying life or any term of years, where the sentencing judge also sets the maximum.[83] It is still the case in the federal system that a determinate sentence is ordinarily imposed from an [80] "Before the Guidelines system, a federal criminal sentence within statutory limits was, for all practical purposes, not reviewable on appeal. Dorszynski v. United States, 418 U.S. 424, 431, 94 S.Ct. 3042, 3047, 41 L.Ed.2d 855 (1974) (reiterating 'the general proposition that once it is determined that a sentence is within the limitations set forth in the statute under which it is imposed, appellate review is at an end'); United States v. Tucker, 404 U.S. 443, 447, 92 S.Ct. 589, 591, 30 L.Ed.2d 592 (1972) (same)"). Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 96, 116 S. Ct. 2035, 2045–46, 135 L. Ed. 2d 392 (1996).

---

[81] "Congress early abandoned fixed-sentence rigidity . . . and put in place a system of ranges within which the sentencer could choose the precise punishment." Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 364, 109 S. Ct. 647, 651, 102 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1989).

[82] "For almost a century, the Federal Government employed in criminal cases a system of indeterminate sentencing. Statutes specified the penalties for crimes but nearly always gave the sentencing judge wide discretion to decide whether the offender should be incarcerated and for how long." Mistretta v. United States, 109 S. Ct. at 650.

[83] MCL 769.9; MCL 769.34.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

indeterminate legislative range, the sentencing judge to consider the now-advisory federal sentencing guidelines. Before the guidelines were promulgated, because Congress had set out no provision for appellate review of sentences"Congress [had] delegated almost unfettered discretion to the sentencing judge to determine what the sentence should be within the customarily wide range so selected."[84]

Because of the wide statutory range for sentencing provided by Congress for most offenses, Congress became concerned with disparate sentencing, as "[s]erious disparities in sentences . . . were common."[85] The ultimate result was the Sentencing Reform Act, creating the Sentencing Commission, which established the federal sentencing guidelines.[86] Sentences within the guidelines were mandatory, though departures were allowed: "the court shall impose a sentence of the kind, and within the range . . . unless the court finds that there exists an aggravating or mitigating circumstance of a kind, or to a degree, not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines that should result in a sentence different from that described. In determining whether a circumstance was adequately taken into consideration, the court shall consider only the sentencing guidelines, policy statements, and official commentary of the Sentencing Commission."[87] A departure from the guidelines range was permitted only if "reasonable, and the court [had to] offer reasons justifying the departure in terms of the policies underlying the sentencing [84] Mistretta v. United States, 109 S. Ct. at 651.

[85] Id.

[86] 28 U.S.C.A. § 991 et seq.

[87] 18 U.S.C.A. § 3553(b)(1).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

guidelines."[88] Sentences that departed from the guidelines were subject to appellate review to determine if the sentencing judge departed "to an unreasonable degree from the applicable guidelines range, having regard for the factors to be considered in imposing a sentence."[89] Review thus considered whether the departure was reasonable, not whether the sentence imposed was reasonable[90] (which is precisely that which the Michigan Court of Appeals is requiring now).[91] Though a sentence within the guidelines was thus not mandatory in the sense that no other could be imposed, because a departure was only permitted if justified as reasonable, the Supreme Court found that the guidelines were, for purposes of the Sixth Amendment, mandatory.[92]

Because the guidelines were in this sense mandatory, and included in their calculation facts concerning the manner of the commission of the crime or its effects not necessarily found by the jury beyond a reasonable doubt in its verdict, the United States Supreme Court found a violation of the Sixth Amendment in mandatory guidelines sentencing. The remedy was to strike the mandatory nature of the guidelines, not its fact-finding, so that they became advisory only. Appellate review of a sentence, once the guidelines were advisory, was problematic—did sentencing return to its previously unreviewable state? The Court found in the legislative scheme statutory justification for review of a sentence for unreasonableness: "a statute that does not explicitly set forth a standard of review may nonetheless do so implicitly . . . . Section 3553(a) remains in effect, and sets forth

---

[88] See e.g. United States v. Rangel, 319 F.3d 710, 715 (CA 5, 2003).

[89] 18 U.S.C.A. § 3742(e)(3)(C).

[90] "In determining whether the degree of a departure from the Guidelines is reasonable, ..." United States v. Hurlich, 348 F.3d 1219, 1221 (CA 10, 2003).

[91] See note 100, and accompanying text.

[92] United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 227, 125 S. Ct. 738, 745, 160 L. Ed. 2d 621 (2005).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM numerous factors that guide sentencing. Those factors in turn will guide appellate courts, as they have in the past, in determining whether a sentence is unreasonable."[93] In short, the review standard is implicit, the Court found, in the statutory scheme, but it became the sentence, rather than any departure, that is reviewed for reasonableness, as review of the departure for reasonableness would have left the guidelines mandatory. And the reasonableness of the sentence is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard: "[a]s a result of our [Booker] decision, the Guidelines are now advisory, and appellate review of sentencing decisions is limited to determining whether they are 'reasonable.' Our explanation of 'reasonableness' review in the Booker opinion made it pellucidly clear that the familiar abuse-of-discretion standard of review now applies to appellate review of sentencing decisions."[94] Federal appellate decisions have thus said that "appellate review is to determine whether the sentence is reasonable; only a procedurally erroneous or substantively unreasonable sentence will be set aside."[95] This means that a sentence is to be affirmed unless "unless no reasonable sentencing court would have imposed the same sentence on that particular defendant for the reasons the district court provided."[96]

And because "advisory" truly means advisory, the Supreme Court held in the Kimbrough case that "courts may vary [from Guidelines ranges] based solely on policy considerations, including disagreements with the Guidelines."[97] Federal circuit courts have thus held since Kimbrough that

---

[93] Id., 125 S. Ct. at 766.

[94] Gall v. United States, 552 U.S. 38, 46, 128 S.Ct. 586, 169 L.Ed.2d 445 (2007).

[95] United States v. Dunn, 728 F.3d 1151, 1157–58 (CA 9, 2013).

[96] United States v. Tomko, 562 F.3d 558, 568 (CA 3, 2009).

[97] Kimbrough v. United States, 552 U.S. 85, 97, 128 S.Ct. 558, 570, 169 L.Ed.2d 481 (2007) (emphasis added).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM to prohibit sentencing judges from weighing factors that are included within the guidelines differently than does the statutory scheme—though the guidelines themselves must be calculated in the manner set for in the statute—"would essentially render the Guidelines mandatory."[98] Thus, "the sentencing court is free to conclude that the applicable Guidelines range gives too much or too little weight to one or more factors, either as applied in a particular case or as a matter of policy. . . . the sentencing 'judge may determine . . . that, in the particular case, a within-Guidelines sentence is 'greater than necessary' to serve the objectives of sentencing.' . . . Obviously, the sentencing court may also conclude in a particular case that a sentence within the Guidelines range is not lengthy enough to serve the objectives of sentencing."[99]

Finally, on appellate review of a sentence, an appellate court is free to presume that a within-guidelines sentence is reasonable. The Fourth Circuit on review of a sentence held that a sentence imposed within the properly calculated Guidelines range is presumptively reasonable,[100] noting that while in an individual case a sentence outside the guidelines range might be appropriate, it had "'no reason to doubt that most sentences will continue to fall within the applicable guideline range,'" rejecting the defendant's arguments that the sentence was unreasonable.[101] The Supreme Court agreed that such an appellate presumption is permissible, for "by the time an appeals court is

---

[98] United States v. Williams, 517 F.3d 801, 809-810 (CA 5, 2008), the court also noting that "The Supreme Court reminded us that 'the Guidelines are only one of the factors to consider when imposing sentence.'"

[99] Id. (emphasis supplied).

[100] In Michigan, by statute there is no issue concerning the reasonableness of a guidelines sentence—it is not "presumed" to be reasonable, but is simply unreviewable as to its length as a matter of legislative determination. MCL 769.34(10).

[101] Rita v. United States, 551 U.S. 338, 127 S. Ct. 2456, 2462, 168 L. Ed. 2d 203 (2007).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM considering a within-Guidelines sentence on review, both the sentencing judge and the Sentencing Commission will have reached the same conclusion as to the proper sentence in the particular case. That double determination significantly increases the likelihood that the sentence is a reasonable one."[102]

2. Sentencing in Michigan: judicial creation of appellate review of sentences, legislative creation of judicial review of sentences, and abolition of mandatory guidelines

Until 1983 it was the understanding in this State, as it had been in the federal system before creation of the sentencing guidelines, that review of the length of a sentence—laying aside the use of impermissible considerations in sentencing—went only to whether it was within the limits allowed by law. For example, the Court of Marston, Graves, Cooley, and Campbell said in 1879 that there "[t]he sentence was not in excess of that permitted by statute, and when within the statute this court has no supervising control over the punishment that shall be inflicted. The statute gives a wide discretionary power to the trial court, upon the supposition that it will be judicially exercised in view of all the facts and circumstances appearing on the trial."[103] In 1894, the Court said that the sentence there "was authorized by law, and was one within the exclusive province of the legislature to prescribe. This court will not review the discretion of the trial court in such matters."[104] And the [102] Id., 127 S. Ct. at 2462-63.

[103] Cummins v. People, 42 Mich. 142, 144 (1879), overruled by People v. Coles, 417 Mich. 523 (1983).

[104] People v. Kelly, 99 Mich. 82, 86 (1894).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Court in 1971 said the same.[105] All of this changed in 1983 with the Coles[106] decision.

The Court in Coles decided to reconsider the venerable Cummins decision; surprisingly, the Court gave no consideration whatever to stare decisis in reconsidering so established a precedent, discussion of which appears nowhere in the opinion—the term is not even mentioned. Though noting that Cummins appeared to "stand for the proposition that there should be no appellate review of sentences imposed within statutory limits," the Court said this understanding was overstated, for the Court had and would undertake to determine if a sentence was unconstitutional as constituting cruel and unusual punishment, or statutorily illegal as outside statutory limits.[107] Further, the Court continued, review of sentences "historically ha[d] encompassed more than the limited considerations whether the sentence imposed was within the statutory limits and whether it constituted cruel or unusual punishment in violation of the constitution," as relief had also been granted if the appropriate amount of credit for time served had not been included in the judgment,[108] and if the sentence imposed was not actually for the offense for which the defendant had been convicted.[109] And, the Court continued, basing a sentence on inappropriate considerations, such as punishment for going to trial instead of pleading guilty, or consideration of inaccurate information, had justified [105] People v. Malkowski, 385 Mich. 244, 247–48 (1971).

---

[106] People v. Coles, 417 Mich. 523, 528 (1983), holding modified by People v. Milbourn, 435 Mich. 630 (1990).

[107] Id., at 529-530.

[108] But to require that statutory commands regarding sentence credit be met is not a review of the length of the sentence imposed.

[109] Again, that the sentence imposed must be for the offense for which defendant was actually convicted is not a review of the exercise of discretion of the judge in sentencing for the appropriate offense within the proper statutory limits.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

relief, as had the imposition of a sentence that violated the 2/3 rule of People v. Tanner.[110] The Court concluded that it was thus "clear that appellate review of sentences to date has included both the procedural consideration of how the defendant was sentenced as well as a consideration of whether the substance of the sentence was statutorily or constitutionally permissible."[111] While this is surely so, it says nothing about review of the sentencing decision made by a trial judge within statutory and constitutional limits, and without procedural irregularity, and provided no basis for overruling Cummins. But the Court in fact understood that review of sentences for legal error was not the same as review of the exercise of sentencing discretion; as the Court put it, the question was whether the Court should turn aside from Cummins, and "expand the scope of appellate review to include a review of the trial court's exercise of discretion in sentencing a defendant when the sentence falls within statutory limits which do not constitute cruel or unusual punishment, when the sentence does not violate the rule established in Tanner, . . .when the trial court has not relied upon impermissible considerations, and when the court rules relating to sentencing procedures were properly followed."[112]

The Court determined so to do. While agreeing that there was no constitutional or statutory authority vesting the appellate courts with jurisdiction to engage in this sort of review of sentencing, the Court also noted with approval the defendant's argument that "no constitutional or statutory

---

[110] People v. Tanner, 387 Mich. 683 (1972). Coles, at 530-532. Tanner is also not a case involving review of the discretionary sentencing decision of a trial judge, but a determination—whether correct or not—that a sentence was not indeterminate unless the minimum is not more than 2/3 of the maximum, so that, as construed by Tanner, a sentence with a minimum of more than 2/3 of the maximum was simply statutorily illegal. The 2/3 rule is now actually part of the statutory scheme. MCL 769.34(2)(b). Nor is review for consideration of an inappropriate factor a review for the exercise of discretion.

[111] Id.

[112] Id., at 532-533 (emphasis supplied).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

provision exists which limits the review power of this Court or precludes it from passing upon the propriety of sentences imposed by trial courts"[113]—and there is now, as to within-guidelines sentences. The Court thus determined that both it and the Court of Appeals had authority to review a sentencing decision by a trial court even where no statutory or constitutional irregularity had occurred either in the procedure in setting sentence or in the substance of the sentence. The standard that the Court decided to employ was whether the sentence imposed "shocked the conscience" of the reviewing court.[114]

Seven years later, the Court adhered to appellate review of sentence length, but, having by then promulgated the judicial sentencing guidelines, modified the standard of review[115] (again, without mention of stare decisis). The Court adopted a principle of "proportionality," which it teased out of the fact that the "Legislature in establishing differing sentence ranges for different offenses across the spectrum of criminal behavior has clearly expressed its value judgments concerning the relative seriousness and severity of individual criminal offenses."[116] From the legislative gradation of offenses and penalties the Court inferred that "with regard to the judicial selection of an individual sentence within the statutory minimum and maximum for a given offense the Legislature similarly intended more serious commissions of a given crime by persons with a history of criminal behavior to receive harsher sentences than relatively less serious breaches of the same penal statute by

---

[113] Id., at 533-534 (emphasis added). As will be argued subsequently, the current situation is distinct, as MCL 769.34(10) is a legislative prohibition on review of a sentence within properly scored guidelines (so long as the constitution is not violated in the setting of the sentence, such as by consideration of an impermissible factor), as the sentence must then be affirmed.

[114] Id., at 550.

[115] People v. Milbourn, 435 Mich. 630, 650–51 (1990).

[116] Id., at 635.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

first-time offenders."[117] And so a given sentence could be said "to constitute an abuse of discretion if that sentence violates the principle of proportionality, which requires sentences imposed by the trial court to be proportionate to the seriousness of the circumstances surrounding the offense and the offender"[118] for the reason that such a sentence was against the intent of the legislature.

The Court looked to the guidelines it had promulgated as an aid, though not necessarily an outcome-determinative one in a given case, saying that a departure from the recommended range provided an alert to an appellate court that the sentence was possibly in violation of the principle of proportionality and thus an abuse of sentencing discretion. And, continued the Court, where departure was appropriate, its extent or degree might itself constitute a violation of the principle of proportionality.[119] In fact, said the Court, "even a sentence within the [judicial] sentencing guidelines could be an abuse of discretion in unusual circumstances."[120] But in the end, the Court continued, "the key test is whether the sentence is proportionate to the seriousness of the matter, not whether it departs from or adheres to the guidelines' recommended range."[121]

Justice Boyle cogently dissented, joined by Justice Riley. Justice Boyle found authority for appellate review of sentences that are substantively and procedurally regular lacking; "[d]espite the fact that the Legislature has not chosen to limit the trial court's discretion, the majority holds that trial judges are to sentence within court-created guidelines on pain of reversal, and that appellate

---

[117] Id. (emphasis supplied).

[118] Id., at 635-636.

[119] Id., at 660.

[120] Id., at 661.

[121] Id. (emphasis supplied).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

judges may reverse sentences by substituting their judgment for that of the trial court. Hereafter, the plea of the defendant who seeks a more lenient sentence than that called for by the guidelines as well as that of the prosecutor who seeks a harsher sentence, is to be filtered through the opaque lens of appellate review."[122] But, said Justice Boyle,

> [t]he Michigan Constitution gives the Legislature the authority to provide for sentencing, a power which the people gave to that department of government. Pursuant to that authority, the Legislature enacted statutes which set the maximum punishment and gave the authority to set the minimum punishment to the trial court judiciary. Thus, indeterminate sentencing is a legislative delegation of constitutional authority to trial judges to tailor their sentences to the particular offender and the particular offense "within the legislatively prescribed range" of punishment for each felony. . . . The Court has no authority to amend a statute. Nor can that authority be manufactured by taking the principle of proportionality between penalties for different crimes and converting it into an authorization to internally restrict the legislatively delegated authority of a trial judge to determine the sentence "within the ... prescribed range" of punishment.[123]

And in People v. Merriweather, writing then for the majority, Justice Boyle noted, in concluding that the sentence there was not disproportionate, that she did not retreat from the view that People v. Milbourn's holding constituted a violation of separation of powers and usurped the authority confided by the legislature to the trial courts.[124] She also aptly observed that "[m]ore importantly, that this Court could seriously debate the justice of the sentence imposed in this case is proof of the ultimate dehumanization of the sentencing process initiated by the decision. Both the Court of Appeals decision and the dissenting opinion vividly evidence that elaborate rationalizations for

---

[122] Id., at 671-672.

[123] Id., at 680-681 (emphasis supplied).

[124] People v. Merriweather, 447 Mich. 799, 805 (1994).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM lowering sentences distance the appellate judiciary from meaningful connection with reality and distort the concept of individualized justice. As Marie Green's tragedy is mediated through the processes of proportionality and guidelines' evaluation, the focus of the reviewing court shifts from the horror of her blood, feces, and burned flesh, to the image of an enfeebled and sympathetic defendant, incarcerated at great cost to the state."[125]

With the promulgation by the legislature of statutory guidelines displacing the judicial guidelines and, unlike the judicial guidelines, having the force of law,[126] the scheme for appellate review of sentences became explicitly statutory, rather than implicitly so, "teased" out of the legislative gradation of offenses and penalties as among crimes. Sentences were required to be within the properly scored guidelines range, but departures were allowed if the sentencing court had "a substantial and compelling reason for that departure and state[d] on the record the reasons for departure." The sentencing court was not permitted to consider inappropriate factors as reasons for departing—indeed, the factors prohibited cannot be used for setting any sentence[127]—and could not "base a departure on an offense characteristic or offender characteristic already taken into account in determining the appropriate sentence range unless the court finds from the facts contained in the court record, including the presentence investigation report, that the characteristic ha[d] been given

---

[125] Id.

[126] See, with regard to the judicial guidelines, People v. Mitchell, 454 Mich. 145, 173–75 (1997), holding that "because this Court's guidelines do not have the force of law, a guidelines error does not violate the law. Thus, the claim of a miscalculated variable is not in itself a claim of legal error."

[127] "The court shall not use an individual's gender, race, ethnicity, alienage, national origin, legal occupation, lack of employment, representation by appointed legal counsel, representation by retained legal counsel, appearance in propria persona, or religion to depart from the appropriate sentence range." MCL 769.34(3)(a).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

inadequate or disproportionate weight."[128] Where the sentence was without the guidelines, then, if "the [reviewing court found] the trial court did not have a substantial and compelling reason for departing from the appropriate sentence range, the court [was to] remand the matter to the sentencing judge or another trial court judge for resentencing."[129] Statute required, and requires, that with a sentence within properly scored guidelines, with no procedural error, "the [reviewing court] shall affirm that sentence." Put another way, there was a particular review standard for out-of-guidelines sentences—substantial and compelling reasons—and there was no review of within-guidelines sentences as to their length (assuming in both situations properly scored guidelines, and no use of impermissible factors in sentencing). And then came Lockridge.

Based on Apprendi v. New Jersey[130] and Alleyne v. United States[131] the Court in Lockridge found that, though the judgment of conviction in Michigan, given our system of indeterminate sentencing, justifies incarceration of the defendant up to and including the statutory maximum, Michigan's system of mandatory guidelines with departures allowed on a showing of substantial and compelling reasons violated the Sixth Amendment because of judicial fact-finding in the scoring of the guidelines, and applied the same remedy as in the federal system: "we hold that a guidelines minimum sentence range calculated in violation of Apprendi and Alleyne is advisory only and that sentences that depart from that threshold are to be reviewed by appellate courts for [128] MCL 769.34(3)(b).

[129] MCL 769.34(11). This Court construed substantial and compelling reasons under the statute as being reasons that are objective and verifiable, and which keenly grab the attention.

[130] Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 120 S.Ct. 2348, 147 L.Ed.2d 435 (2000).

[131] Alleyne v. United States, 570 U.S. 99, 133 S.Ct. 2151, 186 L.Ed.2d 314 (2013).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

reasonableness."[132]

Later, in the Steanhouse decision, the Court was careful to avoid any presumption that out-of-guidelines sentences are unreasonable, as this would restore the guidelines as mandatory. In Gall v. United States[133] the United States Supreme Court rejected any requirement that deviations from the guidelines range be justified in proportion to the extent of the deviation, or that the sentencing court must justify a sentence outside the guidelines by articulating "extraordinary" circumstances, as these approaches would come "too close to creating an impermissible presumption of unreasonableness for sentences outside the Guidelines range.'"[134] This Court found no such problem in the principle of proportionality that informs the appellate court's review of the trial judge's exercise of sentencing discretion to sentence outside the guidelines in Michigan, because, held the Court, the "Michigan principle of proportionality . . . does not create such an impermissible presumption."[135] And it does not precisely because "[r]ather than impermissibly measuring proportionality by reference to deviations from the guidelines, our principle of proportionality requires 'sentences imposed by the trial court to be proportionate to the seriousness of the circumstances surrounding the offense and the offender.'"[136] The concern that "dicta in our proportionality cases could be read to have 'urg[ed] that the guidelines should almost always [132] People v. Lockridge, 498 Mich. 358, 364–65 (2015).

---

[133] Gall v. United States, 552 U.S. 38, 128 S.Ct. 586, 169 L.Ed.2d 445 (2007).

[134] Steanhouse, at 474..

[135] Id. (emphasis supplied).

[136] Id. (emphasis supplied).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

control,' thus creating a problem similar to that identified in Gall,"[137] was thus obviated. The Court disavowed the former notion from Milbourn concerning the judicial guidelines that an out-of-guidelines sentence "should 'alert the appellate court to the possibility of a misclassification of the seriousness of a given crime by a given offender and a misuse of the legislative sentencing scheme'" as "inconsistent with the United States Supreme Court's prohibition on presumptions of unreasonableness for out-of-guidelines sentences."[138] The bottom line for this Court was that, as it had said in Lockridge, "the guidelines 'remain a highly relevant consideration in a trial court's exercise of sentencing discretion' that trial courts "'must consult'" and "'take . . . into account when sentencing,'" but the "'the key test is whether the sentence is proportionate to the seriousness of the matter, not whether it departs from or adheres to the guidelines, 'recommended range.'"[139] Appellate review of an out-of-guidelines sentence, under this Court's decisions, then, is for whether the trial judge abused his or her discretion in imposing a sentence that in the judge's judgment was proportionate, not whether the trial judge demonstrated that the departure was proportionate, with guidelines sentences carefully excluded by Lockridge from reasonableness review.

But the Court of Appeals has restored the guidelines to their mandatory nature; they are, as construed by the Court of Appeals, in the same posture as were the federal guidelines before Booker when the United States Supreme Court held that the mandatory nature of those guidelines was unconstitutional. The federal guidelines were mandatory except that departures could be made if the

---

[137] Id.

[138] Id.

[139] Id. (emphasis supplied). The Court of Appeals has fallen into the error of treating an out-of-guidelines sentence as presumptively unreasonable.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

extent of the departure was reasonable, and it was this system that the Court found unconstitutional, rendering the guidelines advisory, with review of sentences—not departures—for reasonableness. As the Court of Appeals now reviews out-of-guidelines sentences in Michigan, these sentences are presumptively disproportionate, as rather than reviewing for whether the sentence is an abuse of discretion, guided by the principle of proportionality, the Court of Appeals reviews whether the departure is reasonable—precisely that which this Court prohibited in Steanhouse—asking whether the out-of-guidelines sentence imposed is more proportionate than would be a guidelines sentence.[140] This re-establishes the guidelines as mandatory, as it puts them in precisely the same position as the federal guidelines before Booker—an out-of-guidelines sentence is reviewed to determine whether the extent of the departure is reasonable.[141] This Court should at some time restore the guidelines [140] See e.g. People v. Dixon-Bey, 321 Mich. App. 490, 525 (2017). A Westlaw search of the phrase "more proportionate than a sentence within the guidelines" results in 185 published and unpublished cases using that test, and there are others imposing that test but without that precise language.

---

Interestingly, defendant also says that Dixon-Bey requires that judges imposing out-of-guidelines sentence must provide reasons justifying "why the sentence imposed is more proportionate than a guidelines sentence," and that the result is to create "a preference for within guideline sentences and a presumption of unreasonableness for outside of guideline sentences." Defendant's brief at 47. But the problem is not caused by MCL 769.34(10), but the failure of the Court of Appeals to follow Steanhouse and review out-of-guidelines sentences for an abuse of discretion; that is, for unreasonableness, guided by the principle of proportionality, instead creating the very presumption that Steanhouse insists the Michigan system does not have because it does not "impermissibly measur[e] proportionality by reference to deviations from the guidelines," but instead "requires 'sentences imposed by the trial court to be proportionate to the seriousness of the circumstances surrounding the offense and the offender.'" People v. Steanhouse, 500 Mich. at 474. The Court of Appeals routinely flouts Steanhouse by measuring proportionality by reference to deviations from the guidelines.

[141] In 2021 the legislature amended MCL 769.34, likely to render it consistent with Lockridge, but, perhaps influenced by cases such as Dixon-Bey, failed to do so. Though the statute now says that the minimum sentence imposed by the sentencing judge "may be within the appropriate sentence range under the version of those sentencing guidelines in effect on the date the crime was committed" rather than "must" be within the guidelines, as it formerly did, MCL 769.34(1), it continues to provide, however, that departures from the guidelines must be justified as reasonable, rather than that the sentence imposed must be reasonable, and disallows departures for listed reasons, including disagreement with the guidelines, leaving the guidelines in precisely the same posture as the pre-Booker federal guidelines:

A court may depart from the appropriate sentence range established under the sentencing

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

to their advisory status by insisting that the Court of Appeals follow the holding in Steanhouse that "rather than impermissibly measuring proportionality by reference to deviations from the guidelines, our principle of proportionality requires 'sentences imposed by the trial court to be proportionate to the seriousness of the circumstances surrounding the offense and the offender,'" or overrule Lockridge and Steanhouse.

B. That MCL 769.34(10) provides that otherwise proper guidelines sentences imposed by trial courts are not subject to appellate review is entirely constitutional

1. The statute is not inconsistent with Lockridge, which carefully excluded guidelines sentences from its holding

That Lockridge did not abrogate MCL 769.34(10) follows ineluctably from Lockridge itself, which, while severing other provisions of MCL 769.34, never mentions MCL 769.34(10). More importantly, this Court's remedy excludes from its reach sentences within properly scored guidelines, as the Court both in its introductory summary of the opinion and its remedy section limits reasonableness review to out-of-guidelines sentences: 1) "we hold that a guidelines minimum sentence range calculated in violation of Apprendi and Alleyne is advisory only and that sentences that depart from that threshold are to be reviewed by appellate courts for reasonableness"[142]; 2) "A > guidelines set forth in chapter XVII if the departure is reasonable and the court states on the record the reasons for departure. All of the following apply to a departure:

>
> (a) The court shall not use an individual's gender, race, ethnicity, alienage, national origin, legal occupation, lack of employment, representation by appointed legal counsel, representation by retained legal counsel, appearance in propria persona, or religion to depart from the appropriate sentence range.
>
> (b) The court shall not base a departure on an offense characteristic or offender characteristic already taken into account in determining the appropriate sentence range unless the court finds from the facts contained in the court record, including the presentence investigation report, that the characteristic has been given inadequate or disproportionate weight.

[142] People v. Lockridge, 498 Mich. at 365 (emphasis added).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM sentence that departs from the applicable guidelines range will be reviewed by an appellate court for reasonableness."[143] Lockridge cannot, consistent with common English usage,[144] be said to have invalidated the legislature's provision that otherwise proper guidelines sentences are not subject to appellate review, nor is there any basis for the Court to have done so or so to do.

2. There is no "due-process right to appellate review" at all, and certainly not one to raise all possible issues; further, this issue is not properly before the Court

a. The issue is not properly before the Court, not having been raised in the Court of Appeals or the application for leave, and presenting a new issue not a new argument

An issue that this Court specified be briefed in its order is whether MCL 769.34(10) is inconsistent with the defendant's "due-process right to appellate review." First, this issue is not properly before the Court. Neither defendant Stewart nor defendant Posey (in the companion case) raised such a claim in either the Court of Appeals or their applications to this Court, neither of which with regard to the sentencing issue mention either "due process" or a "right to appellate review."[145]

MCR 7.305(H)(4)(b) provides that "On motion of any party establishing good cause, the Court may grant a request to add additional issues not raised in the application for leave to appeal

---

[143] Id., at 392 (emphasis added).

[144] The task here is "to read English intelligently." Northern Securities. Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 401, 24 S. Ct. 436, 468, 48 L. Ed. 679 (1904).

[145] Defendant Posey's statement of the question in the application is "Was Mr. Posey's sentence, while within the guidelines range, disproportionate to the offense and thus, unreasonable? Is he entitled to resentencing before a different judge?"; defendant Stewart's is "Is Mr. Stewart's within guideline sentence disproportionate and subject to review by an appellate court?" Both are premised on Lockridge and the Sixth Amendment. See application of defendant Posey at p.27-28 ("MCL 769.34(10) directs that the appellate court 'shall affirm' all sentences within the guidelines. As a result, the guidelines still have the effect of creating a binding and unreviewable sentence, and so the Sixth Amendment violation persists") ; application of defendant Stewart at p. 44 ("MCL 769.34(10) violates the rule of Lockridge by precluding individuals from challenging disproportionate sentences that happen to fall within a guidelines range calculated through the use of facts found by a judge, not a jury"). Article 1, § 20 is never mentioned in the argument.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

or not identified in the order granting leave to appeal," and MCR 7.316(A)(3) provides that the Court may "permit the reasons or grounds of appeal to be amended or new grounds to be added." Though these rules suggest that the grounds for consideration may be expanded only on motion, there is no doubt that the Court can add issues on its own motion. And the Court regularly does so,[146] on occasion deciding a case on a ground not raised at all by the appellant,[147] sometimes even without briefing or argument on the question.[148] But when is this appropriate? And is the Court consistent in so doing?

On the flip side, concerning the appellee, MCR 7.307 provides that "A party is not required to file a cross-appeal to advance alternative arguments in support of the judgment or order appealed" (emphasis supplied); rather, a cross-appeal is required from the appellee only "to seek new or different relief than that provided by the judgment or order appealed" (emphasis added). This is because a judgment of the trial court should be affirmed for any reason supported by the record, even if not relied upon by the trial court.[149] The rule is consistent with statements of the United States Supreme Court that it is "settled that the appellee may, without taking a cross-appeal, urge in support of a decree any matter appearing in the record, although his argument may involve an attack upon [146] See e.g. such cases as People v. Wilder, 505 Mich. 1052 (2020), directing briefing as to "whether the harmless error test of People v. Lukity . . . should be refined or amended in all cases . . . or where the question turns on the evaluation of conflicting testimony at trial," though no such arguments were made in either the Court of Appeals or in the application for leave to appeal.

---

[147] See People v. Temelkoski, 501 Mich. 960 (2018),

[148] See People v. McKinley, 496 Mich. 410 (2014).

[149] See Allen v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 790 F.3d 1274, 1278 (CA 11, 2015). See People v. Brownridge, 459 Mich. 456, 462 (1999).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM the reasoning of the lower court or an insistence upon matter overlooked or ignored by it."[150] Further, there is a distinction between arguments and issues. Particularly when a case advances to the highest court of the jurisdiction, "[p]arties are not confined . . . to the same arguments which were advanced in the courts below upon a . . . question there discussed."[151] And yet, though raising new arguments for the appellant on its own, and, as indicated, sometimes deciding the case on the new argument without an opportunity for briefing and argument, the Court has on occasion considered additional arguments in opposition to reversal—that is, in support of the judgment—to [150] Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Ludwig, 426 U.S. 479, 481, 96 S. Ct. 2158, 2159, 48 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1976). See also 20 Fed. Prac. & Proc. Deskbook § 111 (2d ed.) ("An appellee may defend a judgment on any ground consistent with the record, even if rejected in the lower court. But it cannot attack the decree with a view either to enlarging its own rights thereunder or to lessening the rights of its adversary unless it files a cross–appeal, whether what it seeks is to correct an error or to supplement the decree with respect to a matter not dealt with below"); Reed v. Commonwealth, 834 S.E.2d 505, 509 (Va. App., 2019).

---

[151] Bankers Life & Cas. Co. v. Crenshaw, 486 U.S. 71, 86, 108 S. Ct. 1645, 1655, 100 L. Ed. 2d 62 (1988); Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U.S. 193, 197–198, 19 S.Ct. 379, 380–381, 43 L.Ed. 665 (1899).

And see Andrey Spektor, Michael A. Zuckerman, "Ferrets and Truffles and Hounds, Oh My: Getting Beyond Waiver," 18 Green Bag 2d 77, 79 (2014) (discussing the "oft-forgotten distinction between 'issues' and 'arguments': you cannot raise an entirely new issue on appeal, but you can, in some cases, make new arguments relating to an already-raised issue").

Very recently this Court noted the distinction between issues and arguments where involved was two arguments but one issue under the Fourth Amendment:

> Defendants argue that plaintiffs cannot proceed with a trespass argument because it was not properly raised before the lower courts and is therefore unpreserved. But plaintiffs have consistently raised and presented a Fourth Amendment challenge . . . .That the United States Supreme Court recognizes two separate tests for determining whether a search has occurred under the Fourth Amendment does not change the fact that the underlying constitutional argument has been preserved. See Yee v Escondido . . . .("Once a federal claim is properly presented, a party can make any argument in support of that claim; parties are not limited to the precise arguments they made below.... Petitioners' arguments that the ordinance constitutes a taking in two different ways, by physical occupation and by regulation, are not separate claims. They are, rather, separate arguments in support of a single claim—that the ordinance effects an unconstitutional taking.").

Johnson v. VanderKooi, —Mich.—, 2022 WL 2903868, at 7 n.5 (No. 160958, July 22, 2022).

Defendant here has raised a new issue—because the Court told him to do so.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

be waived if not raised by the prosecutor in the Court of Appeals,[152] despite MCR 7.307(B), and the general rule that the judgment may be affirmed on any ground supported by the record, along with the requirement in MCL § 769.26 that "No judgment or verdict shall be set aside or reversed or a new trial be granted by any court of this state in any criminal case, on the ground of misdirection of the jury, or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless in the opinion of the court, after an examination of the entire cause, it shall affirmatively appear that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice" (emphasis supplied).

In Michigan Gun Owners, Inc. v. Ann Arbor Pub. Sch.[153] this Court rejected Justice Markman's attempt to resolve the case on an argument not raised by a party as to the issue in the case, calling it a "judicial overreach," and saying that "If it is truly 'of no consequence [that the party [152] See, e.g, People v. Walker, 504 Mich. 267, 276 (2019) ("The prosecution argues for the first time in its supplemental brief to this Court that defendant waived any challenge to the instruction by approving of the instruction before it was given. The prosecution abandoned this theory"); People v. McGraw, supra, at 131 (but note that McGraw does not actually support Walker, which cites it, as McGraw said that "we do not contend that an appellee is required to file a cross-appeal to raise a waiver argument. We simply conclude that an appellee should at some point actually raise the waiver argument" (emphasis supplied). And so a new argument raised by the appellee in the Supreme Court in support of the judgment should be considered).

---

And only very recently in People v. Jemison, 505 Mich. 352, 359 fn 4 (2020) this Court said:

> The prosecution argues that the defendant waived appellate review of this issue by failing to object in writing when it notified the defendant that it intended to admit Cutler's written report into evidence under MCR 6.202. In other words, the prosecution argues that a defendant's failure to comply with a court rule which governs the admissibility of an expert's report waives his constitutional right to confront the witness who authored the report. Merits aside, because the prosecution did not raise this argument before the Court of Appeals, we decline to address it. [citing Walker and McGraw].

Ironically, the Court later overlooked defendant's failure to argue Crawford v Washington, 541 US 36, 124 S.Ct.1354, 158 L.Ed. 2d 177 (2004) in the Court of Appeals ("Perhaps because the defendant did not cite Crawford in his briefing in the Court of Appeals, or perhaps because this Court has cited Craig without the need to consider Crawford's sea change to Confrontation Clause jurisprudence . . . the Court of Appeals did not address Crawford").

[153] Michigan Gun Owners, Inc. v. Ann Arbor Pub. Sch., 502 Mich. 695 (2018).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM had not made the argument],' best we ditch the adversarial system of law today, as under the dissent's approach we the Court will always know not only the better answer than any supplied by the parties but even the better questions than those asked by the parties."[154] And not long ago Justice Viviano, concurring in the denial of leave to appeal, responded to the dissenting justice by saying that "it is not our role to find and develop unpreserved arguments on behalf of litigants. See Carducci v. Regan, 230 U.S. App. D.C. 80, 86, 714 F.2d 171 (1983) (Scalia, J.) ('The premise of our adversarial system is that appellate courts do not sit as self-directed boards of legal inquiry and research, but essentially as arbiters of legal questions presented and argued by the parties before them')."[155] Yet Justice Scalia, obviously a strong proponent of the party-presentation principle, concurred in the reversal of the Court of Appeals in United States v. Burke,[156] though his rationale was, he acknowledged, one that the United States as appellant had neither argued below nor in the Supreme Court, a rationale going to the nature of the claim raised itself. Justice Scalia emphasized the importance of the principle of party presentation, which, he said "is more than just a prudential rule of convenience," as "its observance, at least in the vast majority of cases, distinguishes our

---

[154] Id., at 710 (emphasis added).

[155] People v. Worthington, 503 Mich. 863 (2018) (Viviano, J., concurring).

And see Greenlaw v. United States, 554 U.S. 237, 243–44, 128 S. Ct. 2559, 2564, 171 L. Ed. 2d 399 (2008) ("In our adversary system, in both civil and criminal cases, in the first instance and on appeal, we follow the principle of party presentation. That is, we rely on the parties to frame the issues for decision and assign to courts the role of neutral arbiter of matters the parties present. To the extent courts have approved departures from the party presentation principle in criminal cases, the justification has usually been to protect a pro se litigant's rights. . . . But as a general rule, '[o]ur adversary system is designed around the premise that the parties know what is best for them, and are responsible for advancing the facts and arguments entitling them to relief')."

[156] United States v. Burke, 504 U.S. 229, 246, 112 S. Ct. 1867, 1877, 119 L. Ed. 2d 34 (1992) (Scalia, J., concurring).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

adversary system of justice from the inquisitorial one."[157] Nonetheless, he believed that deciding the case on the basis he suggested was appropriate, for the reason that "there must be enough play in the joints that the Supreme Court need not render judgment on the basis of a rule of law whose nonexistence is apparent on the face of things, simply because the parties agree upon it—particularly when the judgment will reinforce error already prevalent in the system."[158]

Despite the statements in Michigan Gun Owners and People v. Worthington, the Court does raise arguments and issues not raised in the application,[159] sometimes, as the People have noted, deciding cases on these issues, and, on occasion without opportunity for briefing and argument. Given that this is so—and it is certainly sometimes appropriate for the Court to direct briefing on additional arguments—the People suggest the Court at some point consider setting out some principle for when the raising of an argument by the Court not raised by the appellant is appropriate,[160] and, most particularly, also at some point establish that the raising of additional arguments by the appellee to support a judgment is permissible, so long as supported by the record. It is, the People submit, inappropriate for the judiciary to act as a "self-directed board of legal inquiry and research" for the appellant, while denying to the appellee additional arguments in support of the judgment, arguments raised by the appellee him or herself and not the Court; the former should be [159] See recently In re Baby Boy Doe, 975 N.W.2d 486, 497 (2022) ("we directed the parties to brief the unraised and unpreserved issue of "'whether application of the [Safe Delivery of Newborns Law (SDNL), MCL 712.1 et seq.,] violates the due process rights of an undisclosed father'") (Welch, J., concurring).

---

[157] Id., 112 S.Ct. at 1877.

[158] Id.

[160] See Timothy A. Baughman, "Appellate Decision Making in Michigan: Preservation, Party Presentation, and the Duty to 'Say What the Law Is'," 97 U. Det. Mercy L. Rev. 223, 245-57 (2020); Robert J. Martineau, "Considering New Issues on Appeal: The General Rule and the Gorilla Rule," 40 Vand. L. Rev. 1023, 1060 (1987).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

rare, the latter should always be permissible,[161] especially given this Court's duty under MCL § 769.26.

Here the Court has raised not an additional argument but a new issue for the appellant, and this, the People believe, is not appropriate. As the United States Supreme Court has said, rejecting the raising of an argument based on a different statute than that raised previously, [i]t is true that '[o]nce a federal claim is properly presented, a party can make any argument in support of that claim; parties are not limited to the precise arguments they made below.' . . . But this principle stops well short of legitimizing Exxon's untimely motion. If 'statutory preemption' were a sufficient claim to give Exxon license to rely on newly cited statutes anytime it wished, a litigant could add new constitutional claims as he went along, simply because he had 'consistently argued' that a challenged regulation was unconstitutional."[162] Here a claim under the Sixth Amendment is not a claim of a "due-process right to appellate review," and this issue should not be considered, as new constitutional claims should not be added to the case "as it goes along." As Justice Ginsburg said not long ago for the Supreme Court, "courts are essentially passive instruments of government. . . . They do not, or should not, sally forth each day looking for wrongs to right. They wait for cases to come to them, and when cases arise, courts normally decide only questions presented by the parties."[163]

---

[161] And there is no unfairness to the appellant, who may respond by way of a reply brief, allowed under the rules. MCR 7.305(E); MCR 7.312(E).

[162] Exxon Shipping Co. v. Baker, 554 U.S. 471, 487, 128 S. Ct. 2605, 2617–18, 171 L. Ed. 2d 570 (2008) (emphasis added).

[163] United States v. Sineneng-Smith, United States v. Sineneng-Smith, 140 S. Ct. 1575, 1579, 206 L. Ed. 2d 866 (2020) (cleaned up) (the Court reversed the 9th Circuit's "takeover of the appeal," saying that . The Court recognized that though the "party presentation principle is supple, not ironclad," the actions of the panel of the 9th Circuit had gone "well beyond the pale").

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

b. There is no due-process right to appellate review of all issues

And the issue, in any event, lacks merit. There is no due-process right to appellate review, certainly not one of every possible issue. The United States Supreme Court has held that it is "well settled that there is no constitutional right to an appeal."[164] Nor was there a common-law right to appeal.[165] And it has further been held that a right to appeal is not an essential requirement of due process.[166] The Supreme Court has expressly said that "the Federal Constitution imposes on the States no obligation to provide appellate review of criminal convictions."[167]

Though not raised by either appellant in their applications nor by this Court in its MOAA order, the state Constitution does provide a right to appeal: "In every criminal prosecution, the accused shall have the right to . . . have an appeal as a matter of right, except as provided by law an appeal by an accused who pleads guilty or nolo contendere shall be by leave of the court."[168] But nothing precludes the legislature from restricting the issues available for consideration in that appeal. Defendants may—and here did—appeal by right, and raise issues concerning the trial and the sentencing. They may, regarding sentences within the guidelines, raise issues concerning the appropriate scoring of the guidelines, or the consideration of inaccurate or inappropriate material by the trial judge, but there simply is no proportionality or reasonableness issue to be reviewed in the legislative scheme for a guidelines sentence—if the sentence is within properly scored guidelines,

---

[164] Abney v. United States, 431 U.S. 651, 656, 97 S.Ct. 2034, 2038, 52 L.Ed.2d 651 (1977) (citing McKane v. Durston, 153 U.S. 684, 14 S.Ct. 913, 38 L.Ed. 867 (1894)).

[165] Martinez v. Court of Appeal, 528 U.S. 152, 159, 120 S.Ct. 684, 690, 145 L.Ed.2d 597 (2000).

[166] Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U.S. 505, 508, 23 S.Ct. 390, 392, 47 L.Ed. 563 (1903).

[167] Halbert v. Michigan, 545 U.S. 605, 610, 125 S. Ct. 2582, 2586, 162 L. Ed. 2d 552 (2005).

[168] Mich. Const. 1963, Art. 1, § 20.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

and not based on any inaccurate or inappropriate considerations, it is lawful, and there is nothing else to be reviewed. There is no irrebuttable "presumption of proportionality" or "presumption of reasonableness" with a guidelines sentence; the legislature has said no such thing. Indeed, there is no such thing as an irrebuttable presumption—to say there is an irrebuttable presumption is simply to describe a rule of law.[169] There is no rule of law in MCL 769.34(10) awkwardly described as an irrebuttable presumption, but instead a plainly stated rule of law. The legislature has simply provided no standard of review for these sentences, as they are lawful if inaccurate or inappropriate information was not considered, and other than these issues are thus otherwise not subject to review. This does not deny defendant any right to appeal, but only the ability to raise a claim that is not relevant to the validity of the sentence, for the sentence need not, under the statutory scheme, be "reasonable" or "proportionate" in the eyes of an appellate court other than being within properly scored guidelines and absent the consideration of inaccurate or inappropriate factors in its imposition, and nothing in the constitution requires that the legislature provide otherwise..

---

[169] "[C]ourts and legal scholars universally agree that any so-called 'irrebuttable presumption,' regardless of whether one chooses as a matter of semantics to call it a true presumption, is not really a rule of evidence at all, but is actually a rule of substantive law masquerading in the traditional language of a presumption. As one leading writer has observed, 'a conclusive or irrebuttable presumption is really an awkwardly expressed rule of law.'" James J. Duane, "The Constitutionality of Irrebuttable Presumptions," 19 Regent U. L. Rev. 149, 160 (2007). See 2 Graham, Handbook of Fed. Evid.§ 301:9 (9th ed.) ("A so-called presumption which cannot be rebutted by evidence is not a presumption but a rule of substantive law").

Defendants now agree with this proposition, though taking a contrary position in their applications, where it was said in the Posey application that "there is no doubt that Michigan's trial courts are enjoying the benefit of a legal presumption it should not have. Any and all sentences imposed within the sentencing guidelines will be automatically affirmed" (application at 27), and in the Stewart application that "a mandatory, non-rebuttable presumption of proportionality—fashioned by the Legislature to fit a scheme in which adherence to the guidelines was mandatory—continues even though this Court has held that the guidelines, to pass constitutional muster, must now be treated as advisory"(application at 44). Now defendant says that "there is no mere presumption of reasonableness for within- guideline sentences in Michigan because MCL 769.34(10) is a mandate, not a presumption. A presumption, by definition, is rebuttable." Defendant's Brief at 25. This is correct; the statute is a rule of law, not a presumption.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

At least one other state has a similar system. In Washington the state constitution provides that "In criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to . . . appeal in all cases."[170] And by statute a"sentence within the standard sentence range for the offense shall not be appealed."[171] The Washington Supreme Court has held that "[t]his provision of the SRA does not violate the constitutional right to appeal because '[w]hen the sentence given is within the presumptive sentence range then as a matter of law there can be no abuse of discretion.'. . . [and the statute] does not bar a party's right to challenge the underlying legal conclusions and determinations by which a court comes to apply a particular sentencing provision. . . . . appellate review is still available for the correction of legal errors or abuses of discretion in the determination of what sentence applies."[172] So here. Defendant attempts to distinguish the Washington case are unavailing. Defendant says that "the Washington Legislature has determined that a sentence within the standard range is presumptively appropriate." Here the legislature has said that a sentence within properly scored guidelines, absent the consideration of inaccurate or inappropriate factors, is lawful—it cannot, as a matter of law, be an abuse of discretion, just as in Washington. Defendant attempts to limit this principle to what he refers to as "mandatory" guidelines, and agrees that Michigan could do the same with mandatory guidelines, but says that "[w]here there is discretion, there is generally review," and the Michigan system thus fails because "the Michigan Legislature has attempted to limit appellate review of sentencing discretion."[173] But the Washington system creates a range for the presumptive

[170] Wash. Const. art. I, § 22.

[171] RCW 9.94A.585(1) .

[172] State v. Delbosque, 456 P.3d 806, 817 (Wash., 2020).

[173] Defendant's brief at 61.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM sentence,[174] and a sentence within that range—chosen by an exercise of the judge's discretion—is not reviewable, the sentence being, as a matter of law, lawful. MCL 769.34(10) does the same.

There is no review of a within-guidelines sentence for "reasonableness" or "proportionality" as viewed within the eyes of an appellate court, then, because there is no legal requirement that a guidelines sentence be reasonable or proportionate within the eyes of an appellate court, other than that it not constitute cruel or unusual punishment. Review is provided for scoring of the guidelines, and consideration of inaccurate or inappropriate factors, and if the within-guidelines sentence given does not run afoul of these, it is not otherwise subject to review because there is nothing left to review. No relevant issue as to the validity of the sentence is thus precluded from appellate review.

The statutory language is that "If a minimum sentence is within the appropriate guidelines sentence range, the court of appeals shall affirm that sentence and shall not remand for resentencing absent an error in scoring the sentencing guidelines or inaccurate information relied upon in determining the defendant's sentence." The legislature, then, has excepted from appellate review the exercise of discretion by a sentencing judge who chooses to sentence within the guidelines, so long as two predicates are met: the guidelines are properly scored, and inaccurate [174] In a pre-Alleyne decision, the Washington Supreme Court in State v. Clarke, 134 P.3d 188, 192 (2006) held that, where state law allows an indeterminate decision, judicial fact-finding in determining the minimum is permissible ("Because Clarke is serving an indeterminate life sentence . . . the relevant 'statutory maximum' that the sentencing court may impose without any additional findings is life imprisonment. The standard range for minimum sentences under [the statute] provides a guideline for when the ISRB should consider release, but the standard range does not in any way establish Clark''s maximum sentence. Because Clarke's sentence is indeterminate, his exceptional minimum sentence, although part of his punishment, is irrelevant under Blakely analysis because the relevant statutory maximum for Apprendi purposes is life imprisonment"). The Court has not revisited the decision, which is contrary to what this Court decided in Lockridge.

---

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM information—within which the People include inappropriate information[175]—was not employed in making the sentencing judgment. This is a form of jurisdiction-stripping statute, and our state constitution in Article 6, § 10 provides that "The jurisdiction of the court of appeals shall be provided by law," which means jurisdiction is provided by the legislature by statute.[176] A comparison with 8 USC § 1252(a)(2) is instructive. The statute has three jurisdiction-stripping provisions which provide that certain discretionary decisions are "not subject to judicial review," but further provide that predicate legal questions on which the jurisdiction-stripping depends remain subject to appellate review.[177] So also here. The discretionary decision as to the sentence to be imposed is "not subject to judicial review" where the sentence is within the guidelines, so long as the predicate legal questions are satisfied; namely, the guidelines are properly scored, and no inaccurate or inappropriate matter is considered. The predicates are subject to review, but the sentencing decision made within [175] MCL 769.34(3)(b) provides that "The court shall not use an individual's gender, race, ethnicity, alienage, national origin, legal occupation, lack of employment, representation by appointed legal counsel, representation by retained legal counsel, appearance in propria persona, or religion to depart from the appropriate sentence range." The People would also take it that considering one of these factors to aggravate the placement of the sentence even within the guidelines would constitute constitutional error.

---

[176] See e.g. D.C. v. Georgetown & T. Ry. Co., 41 F.2d 424, 426 (CA DC, 1930) ("We assume that no one will question that the term 'provided by law' means provided by statute law"); Nebraska Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Nebraska Pub. Power Dist., 590 N.W.2d 840, 847 (Neb., 1999) ("The phrase 'provided by law' means prescribed or provided by statute"); State v. Pacheco, 850 P.2d 1028, 1029 (N.M. Ct. App., 1993) ("every aggrieved party has the right to one appeal; however, appellate jurisdiction shall be exercised as provided by law. . . . The phrase 'provided by law" means 'provided by statutes'").

[177] See, e.g., Privett v. Sec'y, Dep't of Homeland Sec., 865 F.3d 375 (CA 6, 2017) (holding that the predicate legal question of whether a conviction of a citizen who seeks an immigrant visa for an immediate family member qualifies as a specified offense against a minor is not within the Secretary of Homeland Security's discretion, and thus the jurisdiction-stripping provision does not preclude judicial review of the determination); Zheng v. Gonzales, 422 F.3d 98, 111 (CA 3, 2005) ("8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) strips courts of jurisdiction to review 'any judgment regarding the granting of relief under' 8 U.S.C. § 1255. This provision plainly forecloses review of the Attorney General's exercise of discretion in granting adjustment of status in individual cases, but we are satisfied that it does not foreclose review of the BIA's interpretation of the legal standards for eligibility for such adjustment").

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

the guidelines is not, as it must be affirmed (and that it must be affirmed is another way of saying that it is not subject to judicial review—the two mean the same thing). The statute creates no presumption of reasonableness, which, in defendant's terms, must be rebuttable (there being no other kind of presumption); rather, it renders a sentence within properly scored guidelines, where no improper matter was considered, lawful, and thus not otherwise subject to judicial review.

3. That under MCL 769.34(10) a sentence within properly scored guidelines that was not based on any inappropriate factors is valid, these being the only matters thus subject to appellate inquiry, does not render the guidelines mandatory and therefore in violation of the Sixth Amendment

Defendant Posey in the companion case says in his application for leave that because "MCL 769.34(10) directs that the appellate court 'shall affirm" all sentences within the guidelines" the "guidelines still have the effect of creating a binding and unreviewable sentence, and so the Sixth Amendment violation persists."[178] But this is a non sequitur. That where the sentencing judge considers no inaccurate or inappropriate factors a sentence that is within properly scored guidelines is lawful, and therefore must be affirmed by an appellate court, does not in any sense render the sentencing guidelines binding on the sentencing court, where, because the guidelines are advisory, the judge may depart from the range computed so long as the sentence imposed—not the departure—is not an abuse of discretion; that is, is one, guided by the principle of proportionality, a reasonable sentencing judge could impose for the reasons given.

Defendanst can only mean that because a sentence within the guidelines is lawful without appellate review for an abuse of discretion as unreasonable, while a sentence that is outside the guidelines is reviewed for an abuse of discretion as unreasonable, guided by the principle of [178] Defendant Posey's application, p. 27-28.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

proportionality (at least is should be, but, as the People have shown, is actually reviewed by the Court of Appeals as to whether the departure from the guidelines and its degree are an abuse of discretion), the guidelines are somehow mandatory, apparently because the statutory provision that a properly scored guidelines sentence is lawful necessarily has the effect of inducing sentencing judges to abandon their sentencing discretion in favor of guidelines sentences without consideration of the individual factors involved in the cases before them.

This is empirically untrue. Sentencing judges have departed from the guidelines in a great man cases, as demonstrated by one empirical study.[179] Appellate decisions also show out-of-guidelines sentences litigated many times since Lockridge was decided.[180] And it is of course understandable that the great bulk of sentences will be within the guidelines, just as they are in the federal system. As the Supreme Court said in Rita, regarding the federal appellate presumption of reasonableness of a guidelines sentence, "[a]n individual sentence reflects the sentencing judge's determination that [application of the guidelines] is appropriate in the mine run of cases, [and] that the individual case does not differ significantly . . . . The 'reasonableness' presumption simply recognizes these real-world circumstances. It applies only on appellate review. The sentencing court does not enjoy the presumption's benefit when determining the merits of the arguments by [179] See "Do Michigan's Sentencing Guidelines Meet the Legislature's Goals," prepared by safeandjustmi.org, at: https://www.safeandjustmi.org/wp-content/uploads/2021/12/Do_Michigans_Sentencing_Guidelines_Meet_The_Legislatures_Goals.pdf. The paper has a policy position concerning the guidelines and sentence disparity, which is a subject for the legislature and not the Court, but its study of the percentage of out-of-guidelines sentences is revealing.

---

[180] A Westlaw search of "sentence /s departure /s reasonable unreasonable & lockridge steanhouse" results in almost 200 responses. While most of these are above-guidelines sentences, this is likely because prosecutors rarely appeal below-guidelines sentences (though do so on rare occasion; see e.g. People v. Lydic, 335 Mich. App. 486 (2021)).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

prosecution or defense that a Guidelines sentence should not apply."[181] And even if, said the Court, the appellate presumption—here, the legislative mandate that a guidelines sentence is lawful, if properly scored and no inappropriate factors are considered—"increases the likelihood that the judge, not the jury, will find 'sentencing facts,'[it] does not violate the Sixth Amendment."[182]

C. Conclusion: defendant's sentence must be affirmed under the statute

For over five generations the rule in this State was that sentencing is committed to the authority of the trial court, so long as within legislatively set limits, and procedurally proper. Without consideration of principles of stare decisis, the Court in Coles set aside that rule, observing that "no constitutional or statutory provision exists which limits the review power of this Court or precludes it from passing upon the propriety of sentences imposed by trial courts." The legislature then created a comprehensive sentencing scheme, including two principles of appellate review: 1)sentences within properly scored guidelines were not subject to appellate review (must be affirmed); that is, the legislature enacted a "statutory provision precluding appellate courts from passing upon the propriety of sentences" as to their length; and 2)sentences outside of the guidelines were reviewed for whether the trial judge's expressed substantial and compelling reasons that justified the departure did so. The Court has now made the guidelines advisory, and altered the standard of review for out-of-guidelines sentences to abuse of discretion, informed by the principle of proportionality, rather than, having struck the legislative standard of review, leaving the "ball in the legislative court" as to what a new standard of review, if any, should be. Judges are not compelled to sentence within the guidelines, but if they do, under MCL 769.34(10), which was not [181] Rita v. United States, 127 S. Ct. at 2458.

[182] Id., at 2465.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM touched by this Court's decision in Lockridge, which appears quite deliberately to have avoided doing so, that sentence must be affirmed. There is no basis to set aside the statute, and defendant's sentence, being within the guidelines, is not subject to review.

D. Defendant's sentence is lawful

This Court has asked whether, if the sentence is reviewed other than for whether the guidelines were properly scored or inappropriate material or factors were considered by the sentencing judge, the sentence was proportionate and reasonable. The guidelines here were 171-285 months for the minimum of the indeterminate sentence, and defendant was sentenced to a minimum within that range of 276 months. At sentencing, he expressed remorse for his actions.[183] The People can give no answer to the Court's question other than the sentence is lawful as within properly scored guidelines, with no consideration of improper material. There is no basis on which to set it aside.

[183] "Thanks for letting me be able to speak. First and foremost, I want to apologize to God and to the family of Aaron Foster, and I apologize for what 18 happened and everything. I beg them for their forgiveness. I know that it is a hard pill to swallow for what I'm asking of the families for their forgiveness. I realize how important it is to be forgiven for your sins. With all sincerity, I do apologize for the pain and suffering of the families. Regardless of what might be said after my apology, I want Ms. Foster to know that I am truly sincere and remorseful. I also apologize to you, your Honor, and to my family for being here and for taking them through this. I've been incarcerated since May 6. I honestly can say that I have matured and have grown mentally and that is not the person that I am." ST, 10-11, 599-600a. The victim's mother also spoke at sentencing regarding the pain from the robbery and murder of her son. ST, 8-9, 597-598a.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/14/2022 9:24:38 AM

Relief

Wherefore, the People request that this Court deny defendant's application for leave to appeal, or affirm that MCL 769.34(10), not being unconstitutional, is to be followed by appellate courts.

Respectfully submitted,

KYM L. WORTHY
Prosecuting Attorney
County of Wayne

JON P. WOJTALA
Chief, Research, Training, and Appeals

/S/
TIMOTHY A. BAUGHMAN
Special Assistant Prosecuting Attorney
11TH Floor
Detroit, Michigan 48226

CERTIFICATE OF WORD COUNT

I certify that the foregoing brief_19043_____ countable words.

/s/ Timothy A. Baughman
_____
TIMOTHY A. BAUGHMAN (P24381)
Special Assistant Prosecuting Attorney