Comment:

The story of the Emperor's New Clothes comes to mind. There is no rational reason to confound the English language in support of gender-deniers. Individuals who insist that others speak to them in a certain way, outside of the norms of grammar, are selfish and socially mal-adjusted. The Michigan Supreme Court ought not enable such a damaging-to-general-society scheme. (of course, my personal pronouns would be Her Royal Majesty, even though we fought a Revolution against such compelled speech.) On a practical note, there is no way that such a change could be implemented without creating confusion. Attorneys have enough trouble communicating well as it is. And this I know because I am one.
