The court of law is based on truth and reality. Therefore I believe it would be wrong to enact this rule. It gives credence to a falsehood. Just because a person identifies as a gender other than their biological gender does not make that person what they identify as. If a person inventories as a bear, would the judge have to refer to that person as a bear and accept growling as appropriate responses? Would his council have to keep a chain and leash on said bear? How about a song bird? Would the client be carried in a cage and tweeting songs be acceptable as responses? No, of course not. Just because a person dresses a part does not make them that part. We need to keep a line of truth in court. This will also make paperwork crystal clear who the person is. Simple write 'identifies as ____' in documents. No judge or court personelle should be forced to speak a lie in court.
