Comment:

I concur with the comments that correctly voice the concerns of religious liberty, but this proposed rule is much more than that. This strikes at the very heart of justice and directly undermines our judicial system because it deals with objective, verifiable truth. Can the court rules force judges to say that two plus two equal five? This would force the judges to lie on their own written opinions. This violates their oath of office and their obligation to speak the truth. Judges, of all people, must speak the truth. This now only applies to the courts. Of course, the next step is applying it to all parties. The government cannot change reality because it has an ideological goal. Implementing this rule puts us exactly where Orwell said we would be: if the government says two plus two equal five, then it is so. Do not make 1984 a reality. Truth matters.
